At Holloway, a northern suburb of London, a shocking tragedy has just come to light. A family consisting of husband, wife and boy of 8 years of age, agreed to put an end to their existence, as they had been out of work for some time. A dose of strychnine was given to the child, with the result that he died in fearful agonies. The father and mother then cut their throats, but not sufficiently deep to cause death before they were discovered by the neighbors, and they will probably recover.

THE ORANGE BATTALION'S VISIT.

They Enjoyed Themselves Immensely Here on Saturday.

Orangeville presented a gay appearance on Saturday. Clean streets, flags flowing, and bunting everywhere to be seen. As previously advertised, the Orange battalion visited the capital of Dufferin, and a right jolly time they had. The morning train brought the corps, which is composed of a number of fine looking young men, well drilled and dressed in an attractive uniform. However, not such a large number came as was expected, and the special train, which arrived in the afternoon did not add many more Torontonians to the list. But the surrounding country made up that the city lacked, and the town was crowded all day.

The visitors were met at the C. P. R. station by L. O. L. No. 615 (Orangeville, and the Prince of Wales' lodge (Alton). A procession was formed at the depot and marched up town to the market square, where Mayor Walsh entertained them by a very fitting speech. After marching through the principal streets and giving exhibitions of their heavy drill the members of the battalion dispersed for dinner.

In the afternoon the procession was reformed and repeated the morning program. In the meantime the festive youths and damsels were "tripping the light fantastic toe" in the town hall. After seeing the sights of the town and enjoying themselves to their hearts' content, the visitors accompanied by many citizens returned to the station, where a special train was waiting to convey them back to Toronto. The excursion proved a success, and many said it was the best town they had ever visited.

We hope to see them back in the near future.

"Things are Seldom What They Seem"

While the adverse is in the main true, still there is an exception to the general rule, as in the case of many instances. We refer to Dr. Pierce's pellets, which are not only all they seem, but more. In torpid liver, indigestion, constipation of the bowels, billiousness and bloods, for the relief afforded by them are wonderful.

A Modern Charm.

Mr John Foster, Raymond, Ont., writes:—Nasal Balm acts like a charm for my catarrh. I have only used it a short time and now feel better than at any period during the last seven years. In fact I am sure of a cure and at very small expense.

THE SUN is the best $1 weekly in Dufferin. Try it for one year.

"My father, at about the age of fifty, lost all the hair from the top of his head. After one month's trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor, the hair began coming, and in three months, he had a fine growth of hair of the natural color."—F. J. Cullen, Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

TOO MUCH FOR HIM.

A traveller in the Southern States tells this story to The Chicago Journal:—On the way to Jacksonville our train stopped for a long time at a little station near the woods, and we began to look about for diversion. Close by the side of the track, opposite the station, was a patch of corn, an exceedingly thin and sickly-looking crop. A tall, gaunt boy of about 16 years was lazily hoeing and weeding between the rows. "Look at that wretched crop!" said a Northerner; "dirty seed, poor soil, baking sun, hoe culture, not even a plow to stir the soil deeply, or a cultivator to weed it quickly and often. The weeds will have choked the southern half of the crop before the lazy fellow gets the north end cleared. Boy!" he called, "young fellow! It seems to me your corn is rather small, isn't it?" The boy looked at him for a moment and then replied:—"Yes, mister, pop planted the small kind." "Oh, is that so? But it's rather yellow, isn't it?" "It is, mister," said the boy, "pop planted the yellow kind." "Well," said the Northerner, rather testily, as some one uttered, "it's evident that you won't get more than half a crop." "You're right, mister," drawled the boy, "just half a crop. Pop planted it on shares."

Portia Sentiment.

TO apply the poetic words on medicine that's able to breathe life into a stone, of B. B. B. savors of exaggeration, but considering its countless cures and wonderful work even exaggeration seems justable, as it convinces those who hesitate to try B. B. B. and be cured.

A nice line of Gold Spectacles and Eye Glasses at Fox's.

Holloway's Ointment.—Miners and workers in fire-damp, find this invaluable and renowned ointment is extensively used patronized by such people to their very great advantage, being an emollient compound easily applicable. When used in conjunction with Holloway's Pills in accordance with the instructions for administering the same, it is marvellous how quickly the most obstinate cases of ulcers, bad legs, old wounds, and sores of long standing, give way to the healing influence of this ointment. Holloway's Ointment and Pills do not deteriorate by keeping nor by change of climate, and as they contain no deleterious mineral drugs they can be used with the most perfect safety under the most unfavorable climatic and sanitary conditions.

CATARRH,

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Disease has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Button, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and glossy, and prevents the original color."—Mrs. W. H. Ward, Ashland, Ohio.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hall, Delavan, Ill.

THE UNION JACK.

Yonder waves Old England's banner,
Still recalling bygone years,
As it waved at famous Crecy—
And the battle of Poictiers;
Since the days of Royal Alfred
It hath humbled mighty foes,
Faced a thousand threatening dangers,
Dealt a thousand mortal blows;
Still, the ship that has it hoisted
Can through any ocean track,
Give a shout for British freedom,
Raise aloft the Union Jack!

Mark its course upon the ocean,
Trace its path from land to land,
Ever guided in its mission
By a Providential Hand;
Over stormy oceans wafted
Where huge icebergs rock and roll,
And the briny waves, in fury,
Dash around each dreary pole;
And away in tropic climate,
Where our heroes liv'ouac,
Whilst above them floats sublimely
England's ancient Union Jack!

Raise aloft the Royal Standard,
Let it greet the passing breeze,
Till it braves the ocean's billow,
Stands secure on stormy seas;
As it waved above our Nelson,
England's gallant, matchless tar,
At the Nile's terrific conflict,
And immortal Trafalgar;
To the mast he nailed his colors,
Signalled them for close attack,
"Midst a peal of "British thunder"
He displayed the Union Jack!

Wolfe displayed Old England's colors
On the plains of Abraham,
Where, in war's impassioned combat,
He encountered brave Montcalm;
Ere the din of battle ended
Both the gallant heroes fell—
Loud above the roar of battle
Rose the Highland soldiers' yell—
By a charge of British bayonets
Then the foe was driven back,
And the day was one of glory
For Old England's Union Jack!

Gallant Brock its folds expanded
On the field of Queenstown Heights,
Will the heroic dead his duty
Putting British foes to flight
But ere he reached the frowning summit
But the gallant hero fell,
For his bright career was ended
By a marksman's rifle ball
But his comrades, roused to vengeance,
Like a tempest, swept the track,
And the day was one of glory
For the ancient Union Jack!

Should the mercy Christ be sounded
Over Canadian soil again,
We will guard the hallowed precincts
Where our Wolfe and Brock were slain,
Where our empire's flag's unsullied
On a British hero dead,
Were Canadians dare to follow
And will emulate their deeds
Here to-night for British freedom,
We, or the coward, craven back,
To designate Old England's standard
Our ancient Union Jack!

And brave Scotia's sons are ready,
For their place in the van,
Ireland's sons are gallant, gaysome
As they fight Tuckaroman
And the sons of ancient Erin,
Round the cross of red and blue,
Round the battle flag will rally
As of yore at Waterloo.
England, Scotland and brave Erin
Have ever stood firm as a rock,
And now Canada is worthy them
To defend the Union Jack.

Long live our British subject
Who dare refuse his life to offer
In defence of British freedom
Which rules our Britannia's sail?
Long live those who use the tender,
Pass time by in dark dungeons,
In some lone, which is dell than Darkness from the mark of Cain
Let none be a hated coward,
Born from by traitors black,
But live as a home loyal country,
Where floats the Union Jack.

IN THE SOUTH.

BUREAU OF SOUTHERN NEWS,
Raleigh, N. C.

THE SOUTHERN PINE

The Long Leaf or Southern yellow pine tree is different in many particulars from other trees. It germinates from a peculiar seed. In shape it is somewhat like the seed of the northern pine but much larger. The peculiar shape and size of the seeds cause them to be carried a great distance by the wind. One peculiarity of the long leaf pine is that when once the forest is cut down it does not produce the same variety of tree again. The growth is very slow, and a tree ten inches in diameter is supposed to be several hundred years old. The body is smooth and with few limbs except at the very top.

The ozone generated by this variety of pine is considered the greatest remedy for lung diseases of all kinds. Where the trees are boxed for turpentine, or skinned, the ozone is given off to a greater degree. Many northern people suffering from diseases of the lungs, are seeking a home in the long leaf pine forests of North Carolina, and others have received marked benefit by a stay among the pines. On the Seaboard Air Line Railroad between Raleigh, the capital of the State, and Charlotte, northern people are building up one of the handsomest settlements in the South. Among the northern settlers of prominence is Prof. L. S. Packard, who was for 23 years Superintendent of Public Schools at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. He came South to establish a school in the pine forests where the northern parents having children predisposed to lung or throat troubles, or in delicate health, could send them for the first class education and for the building up of health at the same time. Professor Packard has selected Pine Bluff, Moore County, N. C., as the most desirable and healthy spot in the pine region, and there he has erected buildings for the accommodation of northern children. Those who go there improve rapidly in health. Great benefits are derived from inhalation of the ozone which is exhaled from the pine gum. We have secured some of the gum and we send a sample to the editor of this paper. This gum, placed in hot water and kept in a sick room, is one of the finest deodorizers known, and a small piece, placed in a vessel of water and kept on the sitting room stove, gives a pleasant odor to the room and is considered beneficial to persons suffering from colds or throat troubles. Mixed with glycerine, tallow or lard, the gum is said to make a good ointment for cancerous or old sores, as well as cuts and bruises.

The main or tap root of the yellow pine is longer than the root of any other tree; going down to a depth of many feet. The needles or leaves are very long and a glossy green, and make quite a handsome ornament for the parlor.

Forewarned is Forearmed.

Many of the worst attacks of cholera morbus, cramps, dysentery, colic, etc., come suddenly in the night and speedy and prompt means must be used against them. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the remedy. Keep it at hand for emergencies. It never fails to cure or relieve.

BURIED ALIVE.

CHICAGO, June 10.—An afternoon paper prints the following story and gives a three column account with details that seem to affirm its truth:—Last Saturday the funeral of John Ruske, who died suddenly, was held at his residence, and after the services the body was carried to the cemetery. While the body was lying in the casket friends remarked the life-like appearance of the face, but the doctor had pronounced the man dead and the relatives did not feel like going contrary to the doctor's opinion. When the cortege reached the cemetery some one suggested that the coffin be opened, but this was not heeded, notwithstanding that a tapping from the inside of the coffin indicated there was life there. As the body was being lowered into the grave the tapping became more pronounced, but the people had assembled for a funeral and it had to take place. The coffin was dropped into the grave, the earth fell on the casket, and in a short time a little mound covered the secret. Covered it for a time merely, for yesterday the grave was opened, the coffin removed, and an examination of the body showed that the victim had been murdered through the carelessness of the attendants. Ruske's body was twisted, his features distorted, his tongue bitten nearly in two, and his finger nails imbedded in the flesh. There was every indication that a horrible struggle had taken place.

Plucking Violets.

As "a bird in pocket will never grow again" so a good name once lost we never can regain. An article which after extended trial won great fame and as time rolls on by good deeds still increases, is Burdock Blood Bitters the best cure for dyspepsia and all blood diseases.

A gentleman named Tagliaferro, of Alexandria, Egypt, offers to sell to Chicago a skeleton which he claims to be that of Cleopatra. His price is $60,000 free on board at Alexandria.

Tichborne, K. & P. R. R. Co.

"I TAKE pleasure in certifying that I have used Dr. Fowlers Extract of Wild Strawberry in my family for years and find it a sure cure for diarrhœa and summer complaints both for children and adults."
Mrs. Jenny McManus, Tichborne, Ont.

The "is it hot enough for you to-day" fiend is getting in his work these days.

A Bloody Affray.

is often the result of "bad blood" in a family or community, but no where is bad blood more destructive of happiness and health than in the human system. When the life current is foul and sluggish with impurities and is slowly distributing its poisons to every part of the body, the peril to health, and life even, is imminent. Early symptoms are dull and drowsy feelings, severe headaches, coated tongue, poor appetite, indigestion and general lassitude. Delay in treatment may entail the most serious consequences. Don't let disease get a strong hold on your constitution, but treat yourself by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and be relieved of the pleasures of health. The "Discovery" is guaranteed to cure in all cases of diseases for which it is recommended, or money paid for it will be refunded.

The village of Mountain Grove, on the C. P. R., was almost wiped out by fire on Sunday evening.

"Things are Seldom What They Seem."

While the above is in the main, true, still there is an exception to the general rule, as in the case of Dr. Pierce's Pellets which are not only all they seem, but more. In torpid liver, indigestion, constipation of the bowels, biliousness, and headache, the relief afforded by their use is wonderful.

"Women tell me every day
That all my bloom is passed away"
But they could no longer chide you with loss of bloom and beauty if you made use of the great restorative, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. All female weaknesses and derangements vanish before this excellent remedy. Thin, pale, and emaciated women, who find existence burdensome, on account of their ailments, should at once have recourse to this unrivaled specific. Druggists.

Hail and wind caused considerable damage in sections of Elgin and Kent on Friday evening.

What's The Reason?

The causes of summer complaint, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera morbus, etc., are the excessive heat, eating green fruit, overexertion, impure water and sudden chill. Dr. Fowler's Wild Strawberry is an infallible and prompt cure for all bowel complaints from whatever cause.

Amelia Waterworth, a girl of 18 years died from a dose of "rough on rats" at Dundas on Saturday. She was employed by a family named Davidson. Last Friday she had some trouble with Mrs. Davidson over the loss of $5, took some "rough on rats," but did not tell Mrs. Davidson until it was too late to save her life. The foolish girl told Dr. Ross, who attended her, that she had no intention of taking enough poison to take her life. On Saturday morning she was dead. An inquest was opened on Saturday, and adjourned until next Tuesday. The poor girl was buried by the authorities of the Children's Home, Hamilton, from which she was taken. Monday.

Prof. Loisette's Memory System is creating greater interest than ever in all parts of the country, and persons wishing to improve their memory should send for his prospectus free as advertised in another column.

HEALTHFUL EXERCISE.

Only a few months ago these romping, rosy, cheeked young ones were puny, delicate, pale, sickly girls. By the aid of Dr. Pierce's world-famed Favorite Prescription they have blossomed out into beautiful, plump, hale, hearty, strong young women.

"Favorite Prescription" is an invigorating, restorative tonic and as a regulator and promoter of functional action at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, it is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is carefully compounded, by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. It imparts strength to the whole system. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "sing-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been faithfully carried out for many years.

HEALTH — HAPPINESS — HOPE

It is used in the Hospitals of Europe, and prescribed by the most eminent Physicians in the world. Suitable for old or young. ASK FOR HOSPITAL REMEDY FOR LIVER AND KIDNEYS. PRICE $1.00.

No. VIII This is an incomparable remedy for General & Nervous Debility It is lovely like Manna. Use it and live young. Ask for Hospital Remedy for General Debility. Price $1.00.

Read this extract from the scientific papers of Great Britain and Europe:

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle.

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not for an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, tingling in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only results arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symtoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the droppings into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

T. D. D. Loyd, 8 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the unequalled healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what I tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have persecuted myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shall not fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM
INSTANTLY RELIEVES
Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cents for small and $1 for large size bottles) by all dealers.

NASAL BALM
POSITIVELY CURES
CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my own case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Coy, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect relief of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, [illegible] relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

Best of All

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Bonds, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years. And have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

BEYOND THE MYSTIC RIVER.

Beyond the mystic river
Are paths that lead to peace,
To the mansions of the ransomed,
When strife and turmoil cease.
Beyond the murky waters
Of Charon's sullen stream
I catch the sheen of jasper
Through a star-illumined dream.

Beyond the mystic river
Are paths that lead to joy;
Where the tree of life is blooming
And never grief annoy,
Beyond the storms and shadows
That gloom our lives below,
There is a land all radiant
Where radiant waters flow.

Beyond the mystic river
Are paths that lead to light,
Where the growing sea of crystal
Breaks on the ravished sight.
No sunlight gilds the city,
Nor argent moonbeams play;
God's presence, all of glory,
There pales the orb of day.

Beyond the mystic river
Are paths that lead to love,
Where streets of golden splendour
Illume the world above
There sits enthroned the Father,
Amid the seraph throng
That cast their crowns before Him
And glorify with song.

Beyond the mystic river
I hear the harps afar,
And through the crimson sunset
See pearly gates ajar.
Beyond the vale of shadows
A star beams on the way;
The star that led magi,
Leads on to endless day.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE FORTUNE HUNTER'S VICTIM.

A MONTH later and Mrs. Thornton lay dying. The struggle was over and ended; she had laid herself down contented to die—thankful to leave a life wherein she had found so little happiness—but true to her husband to the last. Silvia was sitting with her one morning, when she turned to her suddenly:

"I have such a great longing on me, Silvia," she said. "I would give anything to see my guardian again, now that I am surely dying. I do not think he would refuse to come."

"Shall I go and ask him?" whispers the sweet voice; and the delicate, lovely face bends pityingly over her.

"If you will. He was always kind to me, and I should like to see him once more. Tell him I am dying, Silvia—he will not refuse. I should like to see him, and hear him speak once more."

"I will take a cab," said Silvia, "and he will perhaps return with me."

She went to the address given, and was fortunate to find Mr. Latham at home. He was in his study, and briefly enough she explained her errand. He looked very grave, and very sad.

"Poor Clara—poor, hapless, foolish child!" he said, "so she is dying—well, she has lived longer than I for one thought she would. She is the victim of a fortune hunter, Mrs. Rymer—that is your name, I believe—the victim of a fortune-hunter, the neediest and greediest of his class."

"You will come and see her, sir," said Silvia gently. "She says you were always kind to her, and she clings to you. You will surely come."

"I will come on one condition," he said; "that I have not to meet that heartless rogue. I could not control myself if I did. I must raise my right hand to punish him."

"You will not meet him," she replied. "Mr. Thornton is gone with a party of friends to Wimbledon."

"Friends!" interrupted the old man harshly: "you mean that he is gone with that woman, of whom everyone is talking—Madame von Faiteuil—he is gone with her, I suppose."

"I know no more than I can tell you sir. He said he was going to Wimbledon for a day's pleasure, with a party of friends."

"He is a model husband, to go out for a day's pleasure while his wife is dying," said the old man, savagely. "I wish there was law in England to punish to him; he should not escape."

But Silvia, though she indorsed every word he said, would not make matters worse.

"Mrs. Thornton never complains, sir," she replied.

"Complain!" he cried; "not she—I know that. She is one of the patient Griselda kind, born to be some man's slave. The only pity is that she did not fall into the hands of a good man. She would not complain if he knocked her down and trampled the life out of her. He has killed her by inches, I suppose, as every one said he would."

Silvia made no reply. The old man rose from his seat, and began to pace angrily up and down the room.

"You cannot tell," he said, "you do not know the annoyance this affair has caused me. The uncle trusted the girl to me, trusted her fortune in my hands, and this is the end of it. I warned her my wife warned her, but it was all in vain; she took her life into her own hands, and this is the terrible failure that she has made of it."

Silvia made no reply, from the simple fact that she was quite at a loss what to say; every word was true. No one knew better than herself what came of it when a girl took her own life into her own hands.

"I thought," she said, after a short pause, "that you would, perhaps, go back with me. I have kept the cab waiting."

"Yes, I will go. But do you know what they are saying of this man all over London?"

"No," she replied.

"They say that he spends all his time with Madame von Faiteuil; they say that he has purposely been unkind to his wife; that he has neglected her, killed her by coldness and neglect, and, that as soon as she is dead, he will marry this beautiful demon. Is it true, do you think?"

"I hope not—I trust not; I cannot say?"

"Poor, helpless child; she was a sweet docile girl, but her fortune was her ruin, it tempted this handsome, needy rogue and she was deluded into marrying him. She might have had such a happy, brilliant life; she might have lived long and happily, but she threw her life away, and now she is dying, you say?"

"Yes, she is dying," said Silvia, gently. "You must not add to her unhappiness one word of reproach."

"I will not," he replied.

A few minutes later they were driving through the streets. She began to understand then how the guardian had loved his unfortunate ward. He told her a hundred stories of Clara's goodness her simplicity, her generosity, always winding up with the same paradox—that her fortune had been her ruin.

At last they reached Cleve House.

"Do you know said Mr. Latham, nervously, "I feel strangely timid. I—see, my hands positively tremble."

Silvia led him into the drawing room, and poured out some wine.

"I want it," he said, "but I could not touch it; it would either poison me or choke me. No, I will not drink it. We will go to my ward, if you please."

"Is he come?" asked the weak voice as Silvia entered the room.

"Yes, Mr. Latham is here;" and as she spoke he came in. The poor lady held out her hands to him, with a breathless sob.

"I am so glad you have come," she said; "how good it is of you."

"You did not think that I should refuse, Clara?" he asked.

"I knew that I did not deserve it," she whispered; "but I am so glad. I felt that I could not die in peace until I had seen you, and thanked you once more for all your kindness to me in those far-off happy days."

He was deeply touched. Silvia knew how his strong hand trembled and his lips quivered.

"It is so long since I have seen you," she said, so "long."

"Yes; I could not break my word—I could not visit here."

"Yes but I felt sure when you heard I was dying you would come."

"You must not be so sure of death," he said, trying to affect a cheerfulness he did not feel, "You may get better Clara. While there is life there is always hope."

"Look at my face," she said; "what is it you see there?"

Death!—he knew it; it was imprinted on every feature, and yet the ruling passion was with her still.

"You must not think it strange that my—that Mr. Thornton is not with me," she said. "He has gone out to-day; it is very dull here always."

She would make excuses for him with her last breath, but here they were neither needed nor believed.

"My dear Clara," said her guardian, "your husband is the only topic that I would rather not discuss with you."

"But you see," she said, in her faint eager voice, "you see that he has not gambled, nor played, nor bet since we have been married."

"I grant that; I admit—so much the better for your fortune; but, Clara, not another word, my dear, on this topic. Tell me, is there anything I can do for you?"

The tears fell from her eyes on his hands.

"There is one thing I wish to ask you. Mrs. Rymer—Silvia—my friend—has been very kind to me. I want you to tell me, can I leave her anything? You told me, when I was married, that all my fortune became my husband's; but have I not the power to leave her as much as would make her comfortable?"

"No," he said, gravely. "Owing to the rash manner in which you married, my poor child, you have not the power to will one single shilling of the thousands you once called your own."

CHAPTER XXV.

A REJECTED APPEAL.

When Mrs. Thornton heard Mr. Latham's words she burst into a fit of passionate weeping.

"I am so sorry!" she said. "Oh, Silvia, I am so sorry!"

"What is it you wanted to do?" asked Mr. Latham, kindly.

She raised her sad eyes to his face.

"I wanted to leave Mrs. Rymer something for life—she has been so kind to me."

But Silvia knelt by the dying woman's side.

"You must not trouble about me," she said, "I would not have you disturbed or unhappy to be made a queen for life."

"The word of such a marriage as yours, my dear," said Mr. Latham, quietly, "is, that it does not only place the wife herself in the hands of an unprincipled man, but all her fortune. I consider that a great evil. Your husband has not done so, but he might have spent every shilling of yours, and have reduced you to beggary."

Still she wept, because to the best friend she had it was not possible to leave even the smallest assistance. Her tears touched her guardian's heart. He said to himself that her wish should be gratified, even at his own expense. He laid his hand on hers.

"Come, Clara," he said "you must not despair. Tell me what you did want to leave Mrs. Rymer?"

"I wished to give her a thousand pounds," said the feeble voice; "that would bring her in sufficient to live upon."

"And would that make you very happy?" he asked.

"I should die with more content," she replied; and in those words he saw the hopelessness of her sorrow.

"I think I know how it can be managed. You always trusted me in money affairs, and always may. I will attend to it for you."

She had always placed such implicit confidence in him, she knew him to be so full of resource, so clever, that she never doubted but that he had the power to get a thousand pounds of hers, if she needed it.

"You will not let Gustave know what it is for," she said. "He would not understand—he does not know how kind Mrs. Rymer has been to me."

"He shall know nothing at all about it," was the grave reply. "Leave all that to me, and trust me, it shall be done. A thousand pounds, a bequest from you, shall be settled on Mrs. Rymer. You may be just as happy over it as though it were already done."

If she had known it was to come out of his pocket she would have been even more grateful; but he was not one to speak of a kindness.

"I suppose," said Mrs. Thornton, faintly, "that your wife could not come to see me, no matter how much I prayed her to do so?"

A shadow came over his grave face.

"I think not, my dear, she was greatly disappointed in you, you know."

"Will you tell her from me, not that I repent my marriage—a thousand times over, not that—but how sorry I am for disappointing her? Will you remember?"

He promised; and then as he sat there he saw a terrible change coming over her face. He rose hastily.

"Is there anything more that I can do for you, my poor child?" he said bending over her.

"No," she whispered. "Thank you for coming. It is growing dark, and it seems to me that I can hear the sound of a river rushing so quickly along. Let me hold your hand once more. Good-by—and, guardian, tell every one that my husband was kind to me, and that my marriage was really a happy one—you will not forget?"

Tears stood warm and bright in his eyes as he went away.

"Faithful to the very last!" he said. "Why are women so good and men so bad? She would rather have died any death than have said one unkind word of him, and the chances are that he never says a kind word to her."

Two hours later when Silvia knelt by the bedside, holding the wasted hand in hers.

"You tell me it is not night yet," said the faint voice; "not yet, and it is so dark? Oh, if the rush of the river would only stop! There is a bank far off all covered with flowers, and I can hear singing—sweet, soft music. Silvia—Silvia, hold my hand fast; do not let me die without seeing my husband. I could not rest in my grave—I should have to come back and look at the face I love!"

"You shall see him," said Silvia, soothingly.

"I must see him. Oh! Silvia, no grave could hold me if I were to die without saying good-by to him. I have loved him so dearly. Do you know where he is? Could you send him?"

Silvia made all inquiries, but no one knew where Mr. Thornton was. The only one who could give any information was his valet, who said that his master was going out to dinner in the evening, and had arranged to be home by six.

So Silvia returned to her.

"He will be here by six," she said gently; "it is after four now."

"Shall I live until then? Yes, I shall—I am sure I shall. The strength of my own wish will keep me alive until six."

She murmured the words to herself over and over again.

"Until six. Oh! Silvia, stand by my side, and count the minutes for me tell me how they go."

Doctors had been there, and looked their last at her. A gray haired minister whose saintly face told of a saintly life, had knelt and prayed by her side. She had finished with the world, but it seemed as though her soul was still held there by the intense longing to see her husband. She had divided all her little treasures, but Silvia steadfastly refused to accept even one jewel. The only gift she accepted was a small ring set with pearls.

"Dark—so dark! And, oh! the rush of the river. Silvia! Silvia! hold my hands fast, lest I fall in. The music is coming nearer to me! There is a kind face smiling at me from among the flowers. And, oh, Silvia, there is another face, like the picture, crowned with thorns!"

A great light came over the dying face, and she lay still, as one whose thoughts could not be put into words.

Then the clock struck five, and the white lips murmured. Silvia knew that she was praying that she might see her husband again.

"Once more, my love!" she said, faintly—"once more let my eyes rest on you! Once more put your arms round me and whisper a loving word as you kiss my face! Oh, my love! my love! how shall I leave you?"

The ruling passion strong in death! She drew Silvia near to her, and whispered:

"If, after I am dead, people say he was not kind to me, tell them it is not true; bear testimony for me that my last words were a prayer and a blessing. Oh, my love! my love!"

A deep silence fell over them, only broken when she started up, crying:

"Oh, the river! the river! Keep me, I am falling in!"

Then the clock struck six. The sound reached her. Who shall say how she smiled?

"God is good to me," she said. "He has let me wait to see him. Set the door open, Silvia, and let them watch for him."

But the minutes passed without bringing him—five, ten, fifteen.

"He will not come," thought Silvia, and her heart sunk with a weight cold and heavy as death.

A few minutes more and she heard a cab drive quickly up to the door, and a slight confusion in the hall, followed by Mr. Thornton's voice, saying in sharp, quick accents:

"Make haste! Quick! I am late!"

A crimson flush passed over the white face. A light, wonderful to see, shone in the depth of those dim eyes.

"Silvia, Silvia, bring him to me! I shall see him again!"

Without another word, Silvia quitted the room, and ran upstairs to Mr. Thornton's dressing-room.

Let no one think what follows exaggerated—let no one think the picture overdrawn. She rapped hastily at the door.

"I want to speak to you, Mr. Thornton. Pray make haste! It is life or death!"

"What is it?" he cried, impetuously. The next moment the door was opened, and he appeared, looking surprised when he saw her. "Mrs. Rymer," he said, "what brings you here? Pray do not interrupt me; I have an engagement this evening, and I am late now. What is it?"

"I pray you, come!" said Silvia, earnestly. "Mrs. Thornton is dying, and she cannot die until she has seen you."

He laughed aloud—not merely smiled but laughed aloud.

"I have heard that story," he said, "any number of times for any number of years."

"But, indeed, it is true!" cried Silvia, clasping her hands in wild distress. "She dare not think what would happen if he should persist in refusing. "Pray believe me, Mr. Thornton! I swear to you, your wife has not many minutes to live! She would have been dead ere now but for her intense desire to see you again."

"I will look in to night when I come home," he said, impatiently. "You know yourself, Mrs. Thornton dies every time I go out to dinner. It is the old fable of the shepherd and the wolves. Please, do not hinder me. It is very painful for me to say to one so charming as yourself, 'Go! but I am afraid I must. I ought to be at Aston House now."

He turned, as though the conversation had lasted long enough; but Silvia caught his arm in an agony of entreaty.

"I pray you," she said, "for Heaven's sake, come. She is dying, sir, as truly as I am speaking to you."

"Nothing of the kind," he interrupted. "I am not to be beguiled into a scene, Mrs. Rymer—be reasonable. I will see her to-night when I return."

"You will not," said Silvia, solemnly, "you will never see her again. I did not think that on the face of the earth there was a man so cold—so callous—so wicked—as to refuse seeing his dying wife."

"She is not dying," he said. "I tell you it is all an old woman's fable."

"May Heaven pardon you!" said the girl, sadly. "See, Mr. Thornton, I would kneel at your feet to appeal to you. For Heaven's dear sake—as you wish to die in peace yourself—if only for one moment—come."

"Oh! Mrs. Rymer, Mrs. Rymer, to think you can be so foolish!"

Silvia's face flushed crimson.

"I warn you," she said, "not to refuse. Your wife says she can not, shall not, rest in her grave, unless she sees you. For your own sake—come!"

He laughed again; but this time she detected something of uneasiness in his laughter.

"I make one more appeal to you," she cried, in an agony of distress—"if only for one minute—for Heaven's sake—come! Think how she has loved you—grant her this one prayer."

He gently removed her hand from the lock of the door.

"That is quite enough," he said; more than enough. I will leave Aston House earlier than I intended to—but go I must."

He closed the door, and she turned away with a despairing cry, that might have convinced him; but it did not.

"What shall I say to her? What can I tell her?" she said. "I would rather die than go back and tell her he will not come. Women love men—and this is what they get for their love!"

She heard his voice calling his valet—hurrying—scolding—and she thought of the death bed so near. Was it any wonder that a wild cry went from her heart, as she asked of Heaven why it was?

Poetry.

THE GRAVE AND THE ROSE.

The grave said to the rose
What can you make at all,
Sweet flower of love with morning's taste,
In dew that on you fall?

The rose said to the grave:
A fragrance rich I make
Of amber, and of Honey sweet,
Wh h from these tears I take.

But tell me dark of grave,
Where gulf wide open lies,
What can you make with those who sleep
In death, and never rise?

The grave said: Plaintive flower,
Of souls as rest on me,
I make at last by Heaven's command
Bright angels ever free.

SLEEP ENOUGH.

Oh, I hate this gittin' up, gittin' up!
Oh, I hate this gittin up, wuss'n dirt!
I would like to lay in bed till the oxen was red
And th' folksses think I m dead, I wouldn't hurt.

I have been a-gittin' up, gittin up, gittin' up—
I have been a-gittin' up forty year
Since I used to live to home, an' my father used to come
With his finger an' his thumb on my ear.

I have been a gittin up, as I'm bound, as I'm bound—
For I reckon me the fun, I am bound—
Sittin' up before the fowls, with my eyes like jooder owls,
Which the voice is dirty fowls—"Hustle 'round!"

I have hustled 'round and sparred, hustled 'round, hustled 'round,
I have scrab bed an' fit an' tore an' hustled 'round—
Till I'd like to take a berth in the cemetery earth,
An' jes' sleep for all I'm worth, under ground.

I will lead a righteous life, righteous life, righteous life—
I will lead a righteous life, if I must
And when Gabriel sounds his trump, startin' sinners on the jump,
I will wait the final dump, full o' trust.

I will go to Angel Gabe—Angel Gabe, Angel Gabe—
I will go to Angel Gabe, an I'll say
"Don't you go for to salute—I am a common kind o coot—
Just an ornery cutoot, plain as hay."

"You don't need to make no show, make no show, make no show,
You don't need to put on style—not for me
I don't want no bright crown, nor no shining golden gown,
For my tastes is all lowdown, like I be—

"Just you put me anywheres, anywheres, anywheres—
Such a somewhere I can sleep—sleep to sleep—
And shake down yours a fix, where it's allus in pos sex—
Where I gets to that an' sticks all the day

"An' send a nigger kid, nigger kid, nigger kid—
If they's colored angels there, as I s pose—
And him tuck a day to shake at my shoulder till I wake,
An' tell me make a break for my clothes.

"Then I'll sort o groan an' yawn, groan an' yawn, groan an' yawn;
An' I'll roll upon my back, half a-turn.
Then, remember, putty soon, rocket man that is to-coon,
An' jes tell the angel coon, 'You be durn.'

"Then I'll bear him crawl away, crawl away, crawl away—
An' he'll tell me, as he goes, 'Don't you stir!'
An' I'll snozzle down—jes so—when it's sleepy warm below,
Just a mutterin', as I go, 'Thank you, sir!'

A Ridiculous Question.

"Do you enjoy good health?" Brown of his friend Jones. The reply of Jones was short, sharp and to the point. "Why, of course I do, what fool doesn't?" Every one enjoys good health when he has it. But some people do not have it to enjoy. Sick headache, biliousness, constipation, deranged liver, and a host of ills, real and imaginary, are their heritage. Thousands of persons cure and prevent these distressing complaints by taking Dr Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. Small, sugar-coated and easy to take; one a dose.

Peddler—"Wouldn't you like some mottoes for your house, mum? It's very cheerful to a husband to see a nice motto on the wall when he comes home." Mrs. De Jagg—"You might sell me one if you had got one that says, 'Better Late Than Never.'"

Things are Seldom What They Seem.

While the above is, in the main, true, still there is an exception to the general rule, as is the case in many instances. We refer to Dr. Pierce's Pellets, which are not only all they seem, but more. In torpid liver, indigestion, sluggishness of the bowels, biliousness, and headache, the relief afforded by their use is wonderful.

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle.

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not for an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession, bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stopping of the dropping into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

NASAL BALM

INSTANTLY RELIEVES

Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

E. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cent for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

FULFORD & Co. Brockville, Ont.

T. D. D. Lord, Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the unequalled healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors called post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, but found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend urging advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have persevered with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, to such an extent that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shall feel bound to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM

MOSITIVELY CURES.

CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Dairymen's Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and cold in the Head. In my case it effected a cure from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Opt. Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect relief from nasal catarrh I ever used by reason of the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of weeks.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. ### A GOOD EXCHANGE.

Leave your frown for a smile, at the gate—
You will find it quite easy to do—
There, a vestry, to tarry and wait
'Till you seek its grim folds to renew;
And as oft as the effort is made,
It will strip from misfortune its weight,
If you always insist on the trade
Of your frown for a smile, at the gate.

For a smile is as catching, you know,
As the light, happy spirit it brings
To the scene with the red rosy glow,
'Round the hearthstone where childhood yet clings;
And the lines of cold care will unwove,
With rude not of adversity's fate,
All its folds from a heart that will leave
A grim frown for a smile, at the gate.

For your frown is quite safe at the gate,
Where no lotterer will steal it away,
With its load of reproaches and hate
To darken some face for a day:
And when, from meek mortals and men,
At eternity's entrance you wait,
May a still voice but whisper you, then,
Leave your frown for a smile, at the gate.

Where there's room for a frown at the gate—
Only room for a frown at the gate!
And but sunshine and smile
Is e'er beaming the while,
Leave your frown for a smile, at the gate!

CHAPTER XXVI.

DESPAIR AND DEATH.

PROFOUND silence reigned in the room as she re-entered it. The nurse sat by the side of the bed. Silvia tried to move so gently that the dying woman should not hear her; but senses sickened by love are not to be deceived.

"Silvia! Silvia! where is he? is he coming?"

"He will be here, dear, soon," she replied.

Never while she lived did she forget the look on that face, the despair that even death could not change.

"Did you tell him that I was dying?" she asked, in a terrible voice.

"He knows, dear, and he is coming."

"You told him, and he is not here. Oh! Silvia—my love, my love!"

"He will come, indeed," said Silvia, bending over her; "have patience one minute."

But just as she said the words, she heard the hurried footsteps of the cruel husband going downstairs.

"Gustave!" cried his wife, and the sound of her voice was so terrible that Silvia shrunk—"Gustave—"

He laughed as he heard it.

"That doesn't seem much like dying," he said to himself. "I knew it was all a farce."

They heard the door close, and the hasty departure of the carriage.

Silvia dare not look at her.

"Gustave!" cried the dying voice again. "Oh! my love, my love!"

The words seem to lie on her lips. She turned her face to the wall with a faint sigh.

"Good by, Silvia," she said after a short pause, and they did not hear her voice again, nor did they know when she died.

Half an hour afterward Silvia went to her, and found her dead.

Yet it was no surprise; they had known her hours were numbered; the nurse had said that she could not live until sunset.

The doctor had foretold that a few hours at the most must end her life.

No one had doubted of her immediate death but the husband who laughed at her dying appeal.

It was a melancholy end. She might have been so happy in the love of a good man. She was so young, fair, rich; she had every prospect once of a long and happy life, and all was destroyed through her own weakness in marrying a man of whom every one spoke ill, against whom her best friends warned her—a man who had never loved her, whose neglect and unkindness had most surely broken her heart, who had laughed at her dying appeal, and sent her to death with terrible despair as her portion.

Silvia waited for him.

She had not expected him any earlier than usual; but, to her surprise, it was not much after midnight when he came.

He entered the house with a careless smile, taking no heed of the grave face of the servant who opened the door.

Then Silvia stepped forward to meet him.

"Ah! Mrs. Rymer, I have kept my word, you see. Now, I will go and see Mrs. Thornton; she ought to think herself flattered. I have left the most brilliant party in London for her; I was late, though, thanks to you, and I am one of those who think it bad taste to be too late for dinner."

Silvia made no reply.

She led the way to Mrs. Thornton's room; it was in darkness, save for the tapers that burned round the dead.

He started back in undisguised horror.

"What is this?" he cried. "My God! what is this?"

Silvia took his hand, and led him close to his dead wife's side.

"That is your work!" she said; "look well at it. Some men drop poison in the food that is given to their wives; sometimes a man loses his patience and stabs a woman. You have done neither—you have deliberately, willfully broken her heart, and you know it; you have done it purposely. You married her without love, and every hour of her married life has been full of untold pain to her. The last cry of her broken heart, her last appeal to you, you have disregarded—you would not listen to it. Now, look, look at that face! You know perhaps, that death should be calm, serene, happy, with a light not all of this world on the quiet brow, and a smile on the lips. Look at that face! look at its heart-break, its anguish, its despair! You sent her to death with despair in her heart!"

He stood in perfect silence, great drops on his brow, and a livid hue on his face. "Upon my soul," he said I did not believe it; I did not think that she was dying—I have heard so many false alarms! If I had thought it I would not have gone out."

"Yet I told you," she said. "You did not care to believe it—you did not wish to believe it. I do not think you would have given up one hour's pleasure to have saved her life."

Silvia was not quite free from superstition.

"I must tell you," she said, "that your wife's last words were that no grave could hold her, that she could never rest until she had looked upon your face again and I warn you that she will see you!"

"Do not say such things—you might see that I am frightened to death as it is."

And the man who had been so expert a tyrant suddenly became the most timorous of cowards.

"I—I am frightened," he said. "Do let me come out of this gloomy place; and I cannot sleep alone. Where is Adolphe? he must sleep in my room, and let me have plenty of lights, please. Poor Clara! Upon my word I am sorry for her—very sorry."

After those words he quitted the room.

Silvia heard him asking for brandy, ordering more lights, talking loudly to drown his fears; and her heart rebelled against the coward, who had not been afraid to break his wife's heart, but who was afraid of her now that she was dead.

He never entered her room again.

All the preparations for her funeral were left to Silvia.

He grumbled frightfully at the idea that he was obliged to attend that.

"Horrible work!" dull—tedious enough to give a man the horrors—it would make him ill for weeks. A funeral when the very sight of the trappings of death unnerved him."

"If I could but make some excuse for not going," he said to Silvia, on the morning of the funeral.

She looked at him with contempt.

His face was white his lips blue—he presented the most abject picture of terror.

"I think it is of very little consequence whether you go or not," she said. "You paid no respect to the poor lady during her life, it seems a mere farce for you to attempt it now she is dead."

"I must go, or the world will never stop talking; and, Mrs. Rymer, I owe you no ill-will, but I do wish you had been miles away before you had talked all that nonsense about my wife, you know, coming back to look at me; of course it is all nonsense, she cannot do any such thing; but it has frightened me. All night long I am expecting to see her stand by my bedside; when a door opens I expect to see her enter. I do not believe it, but did you ever hear of such a case happening?"

"I cannot tell—I have heard of strange things; but whether they are true or not, I believe honestly, from the very depth of my heart, that your wife will come to take her last look at you."

She was startled by his cry of terror.

"I shall die if she does; I will never be left alone again, come what may."

And before he went to the funeral, Silvia saw that he drank a tumbler of brandy. Yet even that gave him neither courage, nor nerve.

CHAPTER XXVII.

A CHILD WITHOUT A NAME.

The funeral was over, the hapless lady was laid to rest, the blinds were drawn up in the darkened house, the gloom was all ended, the servants were pleased with their new mourning, and as death in the family always necessitates a little extra good living the cook was engaged in the preparation of a recherche little repast, to be served up in the servants' hall when the funeral baked meats should be done away with.

In all the world, who mourned for her except the guardian whose advice she had despised, and the young girl who had nursed her so tenderly and so skillfully?

Silvia had resolved that she would not remain in the house one hour after the funeral was over.

There had been no reading of a will, simply because the poor lady had made none—she had nothing to will. Her fortune had passed into her husband's hands at her marriage.

After the funeral, Mr. Thornton seemed to recover his scattered senses. He had handsomely paid the nurse who had attended upon his wife; and she softened by the handsome present, declared he was a strange kind of gentleman, but that he was a gentleman after all.

The doctors were presented with heavy fees, which quite removed all doubt as to Mr. Thornton being a good husband. Then he sent for Mrs. Rymer, but she would not accept one shilling more than her due.

He said something about filling up a check; she told him that she should take nothing but the money owing to her.

"At least," he said; "you will let me offer you your choice from my poor wife's jewelery."

"No," she said; "I have this ring which Mrs Thornton gave to me before she died; I need nothing else to remind me of her."

"You are determined to keep your ill-opinion of me?" he said.

"I shall never think differently of you, Mr. Thornton," she replied simply "I would rather not discuss anything of the past with you."

Just as she was leaving the house a note from Mr. Latham was put into her hands; she opened it and found it was from Mrs. Latham, asking her to call upon them.

"I should like to hear all about the poor child's death," she wrote. "Pray come to me as soon as you can, and, for your kindness to her, look upon me as your friend for life. I have heard of an engagement that may probably suit you. Lady Ianthe Hutton, the only daughter of the Earl of Leeson, wants a companion, and from what I hear of you, you will, I imagine, be very suitable for the offer."

The girl's heart filled with gratitude. After all her troubles, her despondency, her despair, how good Heaven had been to her. Home and friends did not seem to fail her all through, and she had been thrown so young and so helpless, so lonely on the wide, wide world.

She went at once to Mrs. Latham's, and gave the weeping lady the history of Clara's last hours.

"I did love her," said Mrs. Latham. "She was a sweet, docile, gentle girl; yet she never did well for one single hour after she met that wretched man. It was a miserable end for her, but, alas! an end only too common, when a girl despises good counsel and neglects good advice."

Then she told Silvia that Lady Leeson would be pleased to see her on the morrow.

"I think you will be happy with Lady Ianthe," she said "I have met her several times; she is very beautiful, and amiable, I should imagine."

"Why does she require a companion?" asked Silvia.

"I do not know. Lady Leeson told me that she should very much like some nice lady like girl to be with her daughter. I did not ask her why. If you call there to-morrow, you will probably hear more."

She bade Silvia adieu very kindly:

"Remember," she said, "that for your kindness to that unhappy child, I am your friend for life."

As Silvia was leaving the house, a servant followed her to say that Mr. Latham wished to see her. She went into the library, where he sat surrounded by books and papers.

"You are forgetting the principal part of your business here," he said, with a smile. "What about your annuity?"

It certainly spoke well for her disinterestedness that she had not thought of it.

"It certainly made poor Clara happier in dying," he said, "to know that she had made some small provision for you, and her last wish shall be carried out."

She was too simple and inexperienced to ask how. It seemed to her as it had done to Mrs. Thornton, that he could do anything he liked.

Mr. Latham dipped a pen in the massive inkstand

"Now," he said, "you have but to sign your name on these two parchments and you are mistress of a thousand pounds in funds.

How useful neither of them guessed in that hour. Then, after kindly words of commendation from him, she went away. The great longing of her heart was to see little Cyril. During Mrs Thornton's long illness she had been unable to go away, and a great fear was upon her that he would have forgotten her—the baby forget her!

It seemed to Silvia as though no horse was ever so slow as this one which was taking her to Hampstead; she only wondered then that she had been able to remain away so long.

Another half hour and she was seated in the little cottage, holding baby on her knees. Well, of course there never was such another baby, so perfect, so beautiful, so clever; and he was like—oh! so like her false lover; so like him that every glance of the eyes, every turn of the graceful little head, was like a dagger in the girl's heart.

"Oh, baby—baby!" she cried, with passionate tears, "why are you so like him, and he was so cruel to me—so false!

But baby knew nothing about it; his little fingers played with his mother's hair, his pretty red lips were raised to kiss her. What did baby understand about his mother's troubles and his father's desertion—what did baby know about her being thrown on the wide, wide world!

It was one of the prettiest pictures in the world, the young mother with her sheen of golden hair and her fair face, prattling, talking almost like a baby herself, burying her face in the bright, golden curls, telling him that Heaven had been so good to them, that come what would, there was no danger of starvation for them.

"Baby was to go to school, baby should have new clothes, and baby should be a little prince."

All of which baby devoutly believed, crowing with delight, and doing his best to entangle every curl on his mother's head.

"Mamma and baby will always be alone," she said, "alone in the world; but they will love each other so dearly, so dearly."

Yet, in the midst of her happiness at seeing him, she wept bitter tears when she remembered she could give him love, care, and affection, but she could never while he lived give him a name.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

LADY IANTHE'S CHOICE.

Another week and Mrs. Rymer found herself installed as companion to lady Ianthe Hutton; although what that exalted young lady wanted with a companion puzzled her greatly.

The countess Leeson, who engaged her had not been very explicit on the subject. After they had discussed it for some time during their first interview, Lady Leeson had said, very frankly:

"I want a companion for my daughter, on the principle that "constant dropping wears away stone."

"Am I to be the stone?" asked Silvia, with a smile.

"No," replied my lady. "To carry out the simile properly, Lady Ianthe would be the stone, and you the dropping water. You will understand better when you have been with us some little time. I cannot give my confidence to a stranger, but I like your face and trust you; if you justify my liking, I will soon tell you why my daughter requires a companion."

Then Mrs. Rymer asked to see the Lady Ianthe.

"It might be possible that Lady Ianthe would not like me; it would be much better that she should see me."

The countess laughed. She gave Silvia the idea of a French woman more than an English one. She was handsome, with a stately kind of beauty; gracious, with a kind of dignified condescension that did not sit ill upon her; yet one could tell that beneath that amiable, half-yielding, half caressing manner, there was a will of iron; it was the iron hand sheathed with the velvet glove. Her eyes were fine—blue, bright and winsome, but in there depths was something no one understood properly—firmness that was more masculine than feminine; she was the kind of woman who would have made her way over red-hot plowshares, but she would have gone direct.

"The countess is very firm," her friends, servants, and dependents said of her; but the depth of that firmness no one properly understood save those who suffered from it.

In compliance with Mrs. Rymer's request, she rang the bell and asked for the Lady Ianthe. Silvia could not help feeling some slight curiosity as to what the young lady would be like.

That door opened a few minutes afterward, and she entered the room. She did not resemble the countess, Lady Leeson's hair was dark brown, her daughters burnished gold; Lady Leeson had a brightly colored face, her daughter's was clear, delicate, pale as a leaf-lily. The most striking part of her was, that while her hair was of burnished gold, and her face fairer than the fairest flower, her eyes were dark—in hue resembling a purple heart-pansy—with a golden light shining through them; her brows straight, clear, and dark. Had her eyes been blue or gray, she would still have been a beautiful girl; but, with this striking peculiarity, she was lovely as a vision. She wore a plain white morning dress, fastened with a golden pin; no other ornaments, no flowers, no jewels, except that her hands were covered with costly shining rings.

She looked up with some little curiosity as she entered the room, and round Lady Leeson's lips there hovered the faintest smile.

"You wished to see me, mamma," she said, in a low, sweet voice.

"I wish to introduce Mrs. Rymer to you," said the countess.

"Mrs. Rymer!" repeated the low voice, in calm surprise.

"The lady who is kind enough to consent to be your companion," said Lady Leeson.

There were both contempt and surprise in the beautiful face.

"You have persevered in your resolution, mamma. I did not know it."

Then she looked at Silvia, and her face relaxed as she did so.

"You will not prove to be a very formidable companion," she said, with a smile.

"I will try to please you in every possible way," was the gentle reply.

And then, all the details being arranged, it was settled that she should come to them on that day week.

"I should be glad," she said to Lady Leeson, "if you would give me some idea of what duties I shall have to perform. Lady Ianthe has a maid. What shall I be required to do for her?"

"Read to her, sing to her, talk to her. You will find quite enough to do when you have been with us a short time."

THEIR ANNUAL MEETING.

The Cardwell Conservatives meet and Transact Their Yearly Business.

The annual meeting of the Cardwell Conservative Association was held at Mono Mills on Saturday last. Conservatives from all parts of the riding were present, and a great deal of interest was manifested when the election of officers took place.

Mr. R. B. White, the present member, attended and delivered a brief speech. He spoke on the Jesuit bill, the Bank act, the tariff question and several other measures. It is his intention to hold meetings throughout the constituency after harvest.

The resolution passed at the last annual meeting expelling Mr. W Stubbs, V. S., was rescinded and he was therefore taken into the fold again.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are: James Snell, president; Squire Wallace, secretary; Joseph Darrah, treasurer; W. Jamieson, vice-president for Mono; John Kelly, vice-president for Adjala; John Wallace, vice president for Albion; Thos. Glassford, vice-president for Caledon.

A motion to change the time of meeting from June until February was voted down. After the transaction of routine business the meeting adjourned.

PROHIBITION IN MAINE.

A Bangor, Me., despatch says:—Democratic politicians in Maine are in a rather mixed condition just now. The greatest issue before the people of Maine to-day is whether the present costly, impotent and generally absurd liquor law shall be allowed to remain on the statute books or a local option license law be substituted. It is greatly to the advantage of the officeholders of the dominant party that prohibition shall remain undisturbed. It is one of their trump cards in all elections, and in the "frying out of fat" and so strongly entrenched are the Republicans in their hypocritical position that those Democrats who believe in expediency rather than principle are afraid to attack them openly on the question, preferring to go on in the hopeless attempt to elect a ticket upon some other or general issues. This is the situation as it stands to-day, and it is the determined and persistent opposition of the present law on the part of many leading Democrats that caused ill feeling at the first convention, and it is likely to make lots of trouble yet. It would have been far better for the regular democratic nominee this year and for the party in general if the June convention had shown a little more spunk and inserted a license plank in the platform, for now petitions are being circulated all over the state asking that a convention be called for July 15 at Bangor for the purpose of nominating a candidate for governor upon a platform containing but a single plank, the substitution of local option for prohibition. This petition is being signed by numerous Democrats, with a liberal sprinkling of Republicans, and it looks as though the convention will be held.

EDITORIAL NOTES

MR. JOHNSTON, chief justice of Quebec, has been knighted.

MR E Farrar will commence work on the Globe on Monday July 14th.

HON JOHN CARLING made a forcible speech in opening the new grounds of the London Township Agricultural Society at Ilderton on Tuesday.

THE owners of a travelling show, which included in its animals a number of bears, have been arrested at Trent sohn, Hungary, on the charge of murdering a tramp and throwing his body to the bears, which devoured him.

THE U. S. Senate committee on Commerce, Monday, decided to recommend several important amendments to the River and Harbor bill. One of them appropriates $900,000 for the construction of a new lock at St. Mary's Falls and $400,000 to improve the Hay Lake channel, immediately below the Falls.

An English member of Parliament has patented an invention in which electricity is made use of for improving the extraction of gold. An electrical journal expresses a most feeling regret that some readier means is not available for the extraction from the pockets of its subscribers of the gold which has been so long overdue.

DETAILS of the scheme to establish new stock yards in Chicago and freeze out the English syndicate which has just purchased the Union Stock yards for $19,000,000 are made public. When the new parts are established, the site being some distance south of the Union yards, the latter will not be worth one-fifth of the amount paid for them, as the projectors of the new yards control the packing houses. When the packing houses are removed from the old yards to the new, as they will be, the property of the Englishmen will be rendered comparatively worthless. The sale of the Chicago stock yards was one of the sharpest tricks an English syndicate ever ran afoul of, and this experience will cost our British cousins many millions of dollars.

THE M'KINLEY BILL.

ONE REASON FOR SECRETARY BLAINE'S OPPOSITION.

Europeans Prepare Among the Measures as a Declaration of Commercial War—A Retaliatory Scheme Proposed by Germany and Agreed to by Other Nations.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The Herald's Washington special says:

One week ago a desperate attempt was made by some of Mr. Blaine's alleged friends to break the force of what the Secretary of State had said about the McKinley Tariff Bill. That statement has not only been fully corroborated in every detail, but since the surprise is over those in the confidence of Mr. Blaine who know the worst of his mind are only wonder that he kept silent so long. During the last week the Secretary has personally assured members of the Diplomatic Corps that his views were not misstated. To the ministers from the Latin-American States, nearly all of whom were delegates to the Pan-American Conference, he has emphasized in the most positive manner his deep chagrin at the way Republican leaders in Congress have treated the recommendations of the Administration.

Months ago Mr. Blaine intended to speak about what he feared would be the drift of the tariff policy in Congress. He took the quieter course of endeavoring by confidential intercourse with gentlemen of the Ways and Means Committee and others to engraft upon the general tariff bill a special provision for substantial free trade with Latin-America through the agency of reciprocity. He failed for the two reasons that free sugar had been chosen as a bait to the western farmer and because free wool, in any amount, under any circumstances, was a horrifying nightmare to protectionists of the practical kind, Mr. McKinley, as an Ohio representative, was unnerved by the prospect of unlimited cheap wool from the Argentine Republic and Uruguay. But why should Mr. Blaine so suddenly and energetically blow against the Republican tariff policy after giving up his original purpose to speak out to the country about it, and failing in his private efforts to save the commerce of our own continent from its mischief?

They answer that he has cable and other dispatches from our ministers in Europe that the Continent Powers accept the McKinley bill as a declaration of commercial war and are preparing in concert a scheme of retaliation. At this moment the State Department is burdened with dispatches from ministers and consuls, supplemented by semi-official advices, all leading to show how deeply the McKinley Bill has stirred the Cabinets of Europe and how little disposed they are to admit any American product to their own ports that can possibly be prohibited by retaliatory duties or regulations.

It is not alone the pending Tariff bill that has aroused this feeling, but the general commercial policy of the party now in power in Washington. The Customs Administration bill came first, pretending to be a measure to simplify the business of transportation and to suppress the evils of undervaluation, but really meant to obstruct importation and to raise rates of duty by indirection. Then came the McKinley bill with duties intentionally prohibitory instead of simply protective, as heretofore.

The proposition to take concerted action originated with Germany and has been virtually accepted by France, Austria-Hungary, Italy and Spain, and possibly other powers of less moment to American commerce. In these countries the American export trade will be struck at partly through probably high duties on cattle and swine, under the plea of substituting slaughter-pen, canned goods, flour and other staple articles are to be subjected to higher duties.

Inasmuch as the farmers are put forward by the prohibitory tariff men as the especial and beneficiaries of the McKinley bill Mr Blaine thinks they will be interested in learning of the prospect of action by other American cattle, hogs, breadstuffs, and provisions are to be excluded from European Continental markets, with England a good second, though not a formal party to the contract.

THE NORDCAP'S LAST VOYAGE.

A Chapter of Disasters—Burned in the Water's Edge—Seamen Killed.

NEW YORK, June 30.—The bark Athena, which arrived last night from Windsor, N.S., has among her crew two seamen, Henry William and George Winker, who were part of the crew of the Norwegian bark Nordcap which was burned at sea June 9. The Nordcap left Laguna, West Indies, May 6, with a cargo of cotton and cedarwood. She was commanded by Capt Nielsen and had a crew of 13 men. On June 7, when off the Grand Banks on her way to London and Christiansand, she encountered rough weather. A fierce gale knocked her about during that day and night. A high sea boarded the vessel, smashed the wheelhouse and swept one of the crew overboard. On the morning of June 8, Second Officer Orloff discovered fire in the cotton in the hold. The crew were aroused and fought hermetically against the spread of the fire. Flames shot upward, enveloped the rigging and mast. The yardarm of the mizzen mast fell, and killed two of the crew. The flames rapidly spread and the captain, realizing the hopelessness of longer fighting against them, gave orders to clear away the boats. Just then the mizzen mast fell and knocked three of the crew into the sea. The others finally got away in the boats and were adrift for four days, when they were finally picked up by the Norwegian bark Agatha from London.

MILLIONS OF GOLD IN SIGHT.

An Officer's Story of a Fabulous Discovery of the Metal.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 30.—Col. Panfilio Almarez, of the American Army, reached San Diego Wednesday from Juarez, Lower California, and tells of a remarkable strike in the mountains near Juarez. He found gold ore so rich that with a hand-mortar he got six pounds of gold. He declares that it is not a pocket, but there are millions in sight.

A Parkhill Man Killed in Michigan.

PARKHILL, June 30.—Postmaster John Noble had received this letter:

FOWLER, Mich., Clinton County, June 26.—Postmaster Parkhill, Ont., Dear sir,—There was a man killed on the railroad track here May 28, and he had some some papers on his person which gave his name as John B. Niccola of Parkhill, Ont. If you know of him or his people an early reply will be thankfully received. Respectfully yours,

A. L. CLUNEY, Clerk of the Inquest.

ABDUCTED HIS CHILD.

A Sensational Case at St. Catharines.

A case of abduction occurred at St. Catharines on Friday last. A stranger drove near to the rooms occupied by a lady who went by the name of Mrs. Riley, living over Fletcher's store, and, leaping out of the buggy, rushed up the stairs. He quickly returned with a little girl in his arms about six years old, and placing her in the buggy, drove rapidly away. Shortly after Mrs. Riley appeared in the street, but just in time to see the rig disappear around a corner. On inquiring she said she was divorced twelve months ago in Rochester from L. D. Johnston, the United States courts giving her the child born to her in wedlock with Johnston. She is a Protestant and her former husband a Catholic. She came to Canada for the purpose of hiding from her husband, for fear he would steal the child, and now he has done what he threatened to do.

Seven hundred copies of the New York Mercury were seized at Ottawa on Friday. The department of justice has not ruled on the test question raised by the publishers.

Ninty-five cremations have taken place in the crematory at Cincinnati, the latest one last week. The crematory has been built only two years.

Local Intelligence.

Next Thursday is fair day.

Two drunks occupied the lockup one day last week.

The public school will close in-morrow for the holidays.

The volunteers returned home from camp on Saturday evening.

"The perspiration is dripping from your illess" is the latest slang phrase.

The sidewalk on Mill street, recently damaged by the flood, has been replaced.

We are indebted to the Toronto Rubber Co. for a complete catalogue of their goods.

Rev. Marmaduke Pearson, of Peterborough, is the new pastor of the Methodist church here.

A most successful and enjoyable lawn social was held at the residence of ex-Mayor Gilchrist on Friday evening.

At the R. C. picnic at Brampton last Thursday the Dufferins defeated the Excelsiors of that place by two games to none.

Mr. Andrew E. Collins, the G. T. R. bridge inspector who fell from the Forks bridge a short time ago, is rapidly recovering at the Toronto general hospital.

Mr. J. A. McMaster, proprietor of the Turnbull binder works, received an order from Chicago for a car load of these celebrated machines. The demand is so great at home that he couldn't fill the order.

The rain spoiled the Grand Valley races on the 1st, and they were accordingly postponed until the 15th, when the full programme will be carried out. A number of excellent race-horses are entered.

Rev. C. E. McIntyre preached his farewell sermon in the First avenue Methodist church on Sunday evening. The edifice was packed to the doors, and many turned away unable to gain admittance. The rev. gentleman goes to London South.

WEDDING.—On Wednesday afternoon the marriage of Mr. J. A. Sanderson, of Peterboro', to Miss Mary Farnell, of this town, was celebrated at the residence of the bride's parents, Centre street, the Rev. J. L. Gilmour officiating. The presents were numerous and varied. The young couple amid general congratulations left for an eastern trip by the evening train.

WILKINS-REDDICK.—Mr. Matthew Wilkins, of Arthur, barrister, was married at Mount Forest to Miss Mary Reddick, of that place, on Wednesday June 25th. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. E. Radcliffe. The happy couple left in the evening for a trip up the lakes. They will have the best wishes of their many friends in this town for their future happiness.

A SERIOUS FALL.—Yesterday morning Mabel, the seven year-old daughter of Mr. Robt. Irvine, painter, met with an accident that may yet end in her death. The little girl and several other children were playing on the top of a bay window at the residence of Ald. Ketchum, corner of Second street and First avenue, when the little one fell off, lighting on her head and shoulders on some stones. The distance she fell is about fourteen feet. Dr. Henry was called in and did all he could to relieve the little sufferer, but he can't say she will recover.

MORE PEOPLE FINED.—Last Friday P. M. Pattullo and Mayor Walsh measured out justice to James Sanderson and Jack Longeway, who were charged with fighting on the street. The former was fined $10 and costs and the latter $20 and costs. This expensive warning should not go unheeded. If some persons imagine they can do just what they like on the public streets, they will find out their mistake when it is too late. Alex. Hughson and John Carney became involved in a little scrape on west Broadway on Thursday. They paid $8 and $5 for their fun.

CANADA'S GREAT FAIR.—The receipt of a copy of the prize list for this year's Toronto Industrial Exhibition, which is to be held from the 8th to the 20th of September next, reminds us that the fair season is again fast approaching. The prize list shows the addition of many new classes and a large increase in the amount offered as premiums. Toronto offers many attractions to visitors during the season, but the greatest of all is its annual Exhibition which this year promises to be greater and better than ever. A copy of the prize list can be obtained by any of our readers, who may desire one, by dropping a post card to Mr. H. J. Hill, the Secretary, at Toronto.

SUMMER DRINKS.—"Lemonade and buttermilk are as good as anything drinkable that you can find for this weather," said a physician. "They both are great things to quench thirst. They both act as a pleasant tonic to the stomach, and they have a stimulating quality. But they should not be drank ice cold—that is, bits of ice should not be in the goblet. Let them be as cold as the ice chest, or refrigerator can make them, but not more than that. When you pour down your throat a pint or so of fluid that is fresh from the ice, temporary paralysis of the stomach follows. If a man happens to be very hot such a thing not infrequently is as fatal as a stroke of lightning."

Until the blood is cleansed of impurities, it is useless to attempt the cure of any disease. Rheumatism, which is traceable to an acid in the blood, has been cured, in numerous cases, by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, external treatment being of no avail.

FISHING AND SHOOTING.—Lovers of rod, gun, and canoe, should not fail to secure copies of the book "Fishing and Shooting," issued by the General Passenger Department of the Canadian Pacific Railway, for the season of 1890. It is bound in convenient pocket form and contains a vast amount of reliable information concerning the best localities for game and fish in the provinces of Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Assiniboia, Alberta and British Columbia, and the states of Maine, Michigan and Wisconsin; the whole embellishment with numerous handsome illustrations. Covering as it does, the haunts of game and fish from the Atlantic to the Pacific, it should prove invaluable to the followers of Nimrod and Walton. Copies furnished free upon application to W. R. Callaway, District Passenger Agent, 118 King St. West, Toronto.

A FREE TRIP TO EUROPE.—The publishers of THE CANADIAN QUEEN will give a free trip to Europe to the person sending them the largest number of words constructed from letters contained in the name of their well-known magazine, "THE CANADIAN QUEEN." Additional prizes consisting of Silver Tea Sets, Gold watches, China Dinner Sets, Portiere Curtains, Silk Dresses, Mantel Clocks, and many other useful and valuable articles will be awarded in order of merit. Webster's Unabridged Dictionary to be used as authority in deciding the contest. This is a popular plan of introducing a popular publication. Address—THE CANADIAN QUEEN, Toronto, Ont.

SONS OF IRELAND.—For some time past the Irish Protestants of this town have been seriously thinking of organizing an association of their own. Last Monday evening they met in Still's hall and organized a branch of the Sons of Ireland Protestant Benevolent Association, at which the following Toronto gentlemen officiated: A. E. Whinton, Grand secretary and president of Derry lodge No. 3; R Dunlop, grand lecturer; Rev. J. C. Madill, grand chaplain; J. Dixon, vice-president Belfast lodge No. 4; and R. Wilson, chaplain Koniskillen lodge No. 2. The Orangeville lodge will be known as Tyrone lodge No. 5 and has about twenty charter members. After the installation of the following officers a banquet was given at the Gordon house:

Wm. Harding.....President
J. F Bradley.....vice President
H. Ferguson..Recording-Secretary
W. Wallace....Financial secretary
J. R. Dodds.....Treasurer
J. W Ferguson.....Chaplain
R. Wilson.....Inside Guard
Wm. Martin.....Outside Guard
A. G. McKenney, W. W. Bradley, W. J. Johnston, J. Bailey, jr., R. McConnell,—Committee. R. Hughes, B. McGuire, A. McKenney—Auditors. Messrs. Harding, Bradley and Wallace—Delegates to Grand Lodge, which meets in Toronto to morrow.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Ira Inglehart has returned to town.

Jas Semple, M. P., was in town on Tuesday.

Mr. J. W. Price has returned from a flying visit to Manitoba.

Dr. Barr, M. P P., of Shelburne, spent Dominion day in town.

Rev. D C. Hossack and wife have gone on a trip to New York.

Dr. Norton, of Shelburne, visited Orangeville on Dominion day.

Mr. T L. Cranston, formerly of the Bank of Commerce here, is in town.

Mr M. Watson, of the Harriston Tribune, gave THE SUN a call on Tuesday.

MELVILLE.

Prospects for a good harvest are very bright in this vicinity.

Mr. Wm. Delaine, of Toronto, is spending a few days here.

Miss Maggie Hillock is at present visiting friends at Toronto.

Mr. David Thompson, of Melville, is engaged in building the foundation for Mr. Johnston's new barn.

Mr. G. Corbett is causing his friends much anxiety of late. He is thinking of leaving us and learning the trade of car building.

Mr. and Miss Norris, who has been visiting friends at Grand Valley, returned home last week, greatly benefitted by their sojourn on the banks of the Grand.

Nearly all the damage caused by the recent terrific floods is repaired. Mr. Henry Scott is fixing up his mill dam, and all roads and bridges have been put in passable condition. The boys can drive their best girls to town safely now, although Detective Graham had to walk for his carriage.

I saw an item in last week's SUN that said the Cardwell football club played the Melville boys and beat them. Well, that is not so; the Melville team played a mixed club of the Orangeville high school and Cardwell boys. The Cardwell players should be ashamed of themselves. If they can't get up a decent club at home they shouldn't borrow from the neighboring towns. However, the Melville boys will play them again at any time for fun, money, or any other trophy that may be offered. Hurry up! Cardwell, here's your chance, crawl back to your grave or play another game.

Don't hawk, and blow, and spit, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

SPOILED BY THE RAIN!

Our Dominion Day Celebration Program

Cut Short by Jupiter Pluvious—It will be Finished on the 12th—The Lacrosse Defeat Collingwood and the Indians Down the Dufferins at Lacrosse—Orangeville, Alton and Glen Wm Cups at Baseball—Toronto and Orangeville High School Juniors Victorious at Football—The Balloon and Parachute Exhibition Postponed Until the Glorious Twelfth.

Canada's national day has come and gone.

And still the citizens of Orangeville are not satisfied with the promised monster celebration which they advertised to take place in Orangeville in honor of the twenty third birthday of the Dominion of Canada. But it was not their fault, however, that the whole of the gigantic exhibition did not occur as intended, for Jupiter Pluvious took a hand in the business and brought his sprinkler into use at certain intervals during the day. Notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather a large number of people came to town.

Shortly after twelve o'clock the throng wended its way towards the exhibition grounds, where the sports were to take place. THE SUN'S sporting representative describes them below.

Lacrosse.

LANSDOWNES 3, COLLINGWOOD 2.

The first game of lacrosse was played between the Collingwood Juniors and the Lansdownes of this town. The visiting juveniles were much taller, heavier and older than our boys, and showed considerable skill in handling the stick, but the Orangeville boys were just a little more skillful and fleeter of afoot. After playing for about an hour the score stood three to two in favor of Orangeville. In this game a Collingwood player had his wrist badly hurt by being accidently struck by an opponent.

THE REDMEN WIN.

After the juniors had finished their match the Dufferins and the Tuscarora Indians took the field and entertained the crowd by setting up a capital game of lacrosse. The Indians have visited Orangeville on several different occasions and have always been defeated by the Dufferins. This time they sent up a "crack" team, and the result was rather disastrous to Orangeville. There was no rough play indulged in by either teams, on the contrary, good, scientific lacrosse characterized the game throughout. When time was called the Indians were declared winners, they having captured four games to the Dufferins' one.

Baseball.

A 0 FOR HARRISTON.

The Alton and Harriston baseball clubs played a nine inning game and each club had 18 runs to its credit. A dispute arose in the ninth inning over one of the umpire's judgments, and the Harriston men left the field. Umpire Fletcher then gave Alton the game by 9 runs to 0.

HILLSBURG WOULDN'T PLAY.

When the umpire called the Orangeville-Hillsburg game the latter club refused to play on the ground that Orangeville had outside players. After trying every way to induce the Hillsburgers to play ball the umpire, when he found the visitors still stuck to their determination, awarded the game to Orangeville by 9 runs to 0.

GLENO PARALYZES CAMILLA.

This was the most interesting game of baseball played during the day. Gleno (we are told is a small place somewhere near Camilla) sent down a strong nine and razzle dazzled the Camilla nine to the tune of 20 runs to 9. If the losing club had had a good pitcher the game would undoubtedly have ended differently.

Football.

TORONTO TROUNCES ORANGEVILLE.

The Marlboros' of Toronto and the town club played an excellent game of football on the northern end of the field. Both teams were very evenly matched and the ball was on the move all the time. Each team had two goals taken and time was about up, when the Toronto boys scored another game. This last game was disputed by the home club, but the umpire's decision was in favor of the visitors, and consequently they won the match by 3 goals to 2.

MONO MILLS IN THE SOUP

The Orangeville High School Juniors and the Mono Mills club next tackled each other. The play was fast and furious while it lasted. Finally our south ern surburbans yielded to the great attacks on their flags and the juniors captured the cup and game with 3 goals to 2 in their favor.

Races.

100 yard race H. Ketchum 1st., A. Forester 2nd.

200 yard race J. Thompson 1st., W. Kearns 2nd.

Dominion Day Bets.

The gate receipts amounted to $371.

Joe Kelly conducted the refreshment booths in a first class manner.

The sword combat was a glaring fizzle of the first water. If Prof. Reid and Capt. McGregor can't give a better exhibition than the one they imposed on a suffering public here, our advice to them is "retire for good."

The Shelburne and Orangeville bands supplied music during the day.

A special train carried visitors to Dundalk and intermediate stations at 10:45 P. M.

On account of the rain the evening and part of the afternoon programme has been postponed until the evening of the 12th, when there will be foot races, lacrosse matches and other sports. Prof. Brandy, of Cleveland, will ascend in his balloon and drop from the clouds. Come and see this wonderful feat, the like of which has never been attempted in this part of the country. For further particulars look out for small bills.

Constipation
Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.
"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.
"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leitlsville, Pa.
"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an Effective Remedy
for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.
"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.
"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

THE NEW HALIFAX CABLE

THE OLD SEAPORT TOWN AND THE BERMUDAS JOINED.

Successful Completion of the Westmouth's Labors—The Rate Between the Two Countries to be 75 Cents Per Word—A Reported Transfer of Troops.

HALIFAX, July 1.—The steamer Westmouth, which left here last Tuesday afternoon to lay the cable to Bermuda, reached her destination last evening. The officials here received a message over the cable at exactly 3 o'clock saying that the steamer had reached Bermuda, having successfully laid the cable the entire distance and buoyed the end. The shore end having already been laid, the connection was made to-day. The line is now complete and Halifax and Bermuda united.

It is reported that the troopship Orontes will leave England about September 14, with the Eighth (King's Royal) regiment for Bermuda to relieve the Seventeenth (Leicester) regiment, and will bring the latter to Halifax, the West Riding regiment embarking on her the first part of October for Kingston, Jamaica, and Barbados, where they are to be stationed. The troopship Tyne is now due with drafts for various corps on this garrison and for several ships in port and also for the Seventeenth at Bermuda.

Bermuda, now connected with the rest of the world by telegraph cable, is a group of islands lying 600 miles east by south from Cape Hatteras, in latitude 32 deg. 20 min. north, and in longitude 64 deg. 50 min. west. These islands form the southward of a coral reef about 20 miles in length, extending northwest to a outward, by 12 miles in breadth.

There are two towns, St. George's and Hamilton, the latter being the centre of the colonial government. The whole population numbers about 15,000, of whom about one-third are whites. The soil is very fertile and a large business is done with New York in vegetables and flowers. It is one of Great Britain's naval stations, having large docking facilities and ample plant for the repair of modern war ships.

The Westmouth sailed from London on May 29 with the cable and arrived here on June 7. She has been fitted up for the work by the contractors, who have utilized the tanks and other machinery taken out of the Roldan, after that vessel had completed the laying of the Cuba—West Indian cables.

The Westmouth began landing the shore end for the expansion of the Bermuda station, and had the shore end there and paid out a short distance seaward. The cable was then cut and buoyed and the Westmouth proceeded to Halifax laying soundings on the way. A line of soundings on this route was made by the contractors and deep water with level bottom was reported throughout. The work of the Westmouth was chiefly confined to making accurate observations of the ground at each end of the route. Starting from Bermuda into deep water and approaching Halifax, from deep water through the gap of the Labrador bank.

At Halifax where the Westmouth arrived June 7, the north end was landed, and then she began laying outbound for Bermuda. The cable was originally intended to go to Halifax, but owing to the great expense of laying the extra 7 miles it was decided that the shore end should be laid at Chebucto Head, the entrance to Halifax harbor. The Bermuda shore end was then laid, and the Halifax shore end was then laid in the harbor. A small line and the deep sea section

The cable is to be opened for general commercial business from 8 o'clock p.m. and the greatest amount of traffic is anticipated between New York and Bermuda. Arrangements are now being negotiated with the American, Canadian and European lines for a proportion of the business.

The cable is to be extended to Nassau and Jamaica and thence to Progreso and Vera Cruz. A branch will be laid from Bermuda to the Azores and thence to Lisbon, Portugal.

The rate for cable between Bermuda and Halifax will be 75 cents.

MONTREAL, July 1.—The negotiations between the English syndicate and the Canadian Cotton Association for the purchase of all the cotton mills have fallen through owing, it is said, to the exorbitant figures asked for the mills, as well as to the fact that the syndicate seem to have been grossly misled by some of the results of many of these Canadian concerns and are consequently extremely cautious in making new investments.

FIVE ACRES OF FIRE.

A BIG BLAZE AT KENTUCKY'S METROPOLIS.

The Standard Oil Refinery Consumed—Hundreds of Gallons of Burning Oil—Seven Persons Injured, two Fatally—A $100,000 Conflagration in Minneapolis.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 30.—Five acres of fire was the awful sight witnessed at the Standard Oil refinery at Fifth and Cedrona this morning. The immense structure was blazing at every point, and the heat was so intense that even at 200 yards persons were overcome. It was first reported that seven persons had lost their lives and later that three were killed and 33 wounded, but it is now believed that only seven were injured, two fatally. The fire broke out at 8½. The refinery is on the east side of the Louisville & Nashville Railway, but the tanks are scattered along it on both sides. Saturday a tank of crude oil came in on a flat car from Cleveland and it was to be turned into the refinery vats. Some of the workmen thought the iron tank was too hot for such a thing to be done in safety. After consultation it was postponed in the hope that the tank would be cooler. It did not prove to be, however, and it became necessary to run the oil out of the car tank into another in the yard. Inspector Keene took John Pitig and another workman with him and they climbed on the car. They were about to unscrew the cap when they felt there was a tremendous pressure from the inside against the head. At first they decided not to open it. Finally they opened it.

In an instant there was a dull puff as the vapor escaped, filling the air all around. The gas, as is known, is heavier than the air, and it sank to the ground spreading out all over the locality and moving with the wind. Almost in a twinkling it reached one of the sheds under which there was a fire. There was a flash as the inflammable vapor ignited, and at once there was a tremendous explosion. The tank was blown to pieces and hundreds of gallons of burning oil were scattered all over the great works. A wall of fire 30 feet high and nearly 900 feet long moved with lightning rapidity to the building. In less time than it takes to relate the story the sheds, filled with thousands of gallons of canned oil, the cooper shop, the carpenter shop, pump and engine houses, the filling and lubricating houses, the storage houses, the painting shop, houses and 1 miles of platform were all ablaze and burned furiously.

At the first intimation of the explosion all of the workmen who could do so started to run. Johnny Kline, however, stumbled and fell and his clothes caught fire. The man bravely returned to his assistance, but the fire had envelopes him and he died in agony. Pitig also had his clothes frightfully burned.

Three little boys, Danny O'Neill and Andrew and John Albright, were on the railway track when the explosion occurred. They were sleeping in the east of the tank so the wind blew the blaze down upon them. Shrieking with pain, they impulsively jumped backward and into the cleared place on the western side of the track with the bright blazes following in them. # THE SUMMER BALL DRESS

TOILETS FOR SEASIDE HOPS AND GAIETIES.

The Smart Dancing Dress and How It Is Made—Airy Robes That Might be Worn by Fairies in the "Midsummer Night's Dream"—Lace Net and Tulles.

Five out of every ten smart ball dresses this summer are white. Two out of the remaining five are a light mauve. Red has vanished from evening wear. Pale pink gauze, prunes and many shades of lilac are seen. Next to these comes a silver gray. Pale blue and green blue are noted, and black tulle flowered with splendid gold embroidery.

The summer ball dress touches the ground. Though the empire body, at least in literal, short-waisted rendering, has disappeared from daylight toilets, it is still noted, with each through which is threaded a bunch of flowers, for evening. The skirt of a ball gown is never less than two yards and a half wide, often it is fuller. To make the flimsy tulle as stout as will fit the absence of dress stiffs a silk petticoat is resorted to. This is fulled up the back with narrow plaited flounces, each flounce edged with lace. Lest this should not be sufficient, the hem of the foundation skirt has a ruche on the outside of the silk all around, and is lined half a yard up with stiffening. Sometimes this ruche at the foot is of pink silk, sometimes it has flowers nestling in it. Over this the lace or tulle falls full, but the number of yards is less than formerly.

The modern maiden doesn't call for more than three layers above the silk or satin foundation—satin, I believe, is preferred—and of these the innermost is quite likely to be not carefully watching the gauze but a little less coldweb-like and fragile. This skirt is straight and plain in the back; in front it may be draped slightly. None of the quaint empire gowns allow only one straight veil of tulle over the foundation in front, but in sleeves, half low bodice and lavish garniture of white roses and foliage. The fabrics are good to young girls who dance. The cloud-like fabrics meant to float mistaks in summer ballrooms grow in beauty and multiply on every hand. And even for the maid who sighs for such "dear delights and sighs in vain" there is comfort, for one she not take an old silk skirt left from last season and cover it with white organdie, with ballet skirts and baby waist and lace edging. Gowns to be worn under gaslight will always admit of greater makeshifts than those which appear by day.

The Care of the Hair.

A woman who has been for many years at the head of a large hair dressing establishment expresses the opinion that the average woman drowns the life of her hair by frequent washings. For cleaning the heads of customers whom she visits twice a week she uses not a drop of water, but pins her faith to a good brush, a short bristled, narrow brush, backed with wood, rather than one of the elaborate articles in silver or ivory, and the way she operates is as follows:

"The first thing to do when the hair is unpinned is to loosen it by lightly tossing is about. The operation need not tangle it, and as the tresses are being aired they fall into natural lengths. Instead of beginning at the scalp the first combing should start at the end of the hair. In other words, comb upwards to avoid tangling, breaking and tearing the hair out. This raking of the hair will remove considerable dust. The scalp should be cleaned in spots and sections, and a fine tooth comb is indispensable. It is not necessary to draw the comb down through the hair. Dandruff can be removed by combing the surface where it has accumulated, and by slanting the fine comb it may be brought from the scalp without having to go the whole length of the hair. As I said before, when the head skin has been loosened, a thorough brushing is all that is required to remove it. By thorough I mean to spend a full hour, first brushing the head and then the hair to free it from the scurf and eruptions of skin. Frequently this can be accomplished by shaking out or fanning the hair, and subsequent brushing will give the hair the glossy, silky finish for which so much pomade is used."

Summer Gowns.

It will be the fashion to show a great deal of neck this summer, writes Miss Mantiani, in Fall Mall Budget. All the summer dresses are cut remarkably low. Some are cut in a quaint fashion with a lace or muslin ruffle others are shaped like a V in front. This is a pretty style for girls, but it is utterly unsuited for a woman out of the twenties. I have seen some charming frocks in spotted or sprigged muslin for youthful wearers. An example was of white muslin with a pink flower. The bodice was made with a few folds, and a yoke run into tiny tucks. It fitted inside the skirt. This dress was cut very low at the neck and ornamented with a lilac ruffle. The blown sleeves had ruffles at the wrists.

Summer Scarfs.

The gauzy scarfs that may be wound round the head and shoulders are not likely to be omitted from the summer wraps very soon. They are far too advantageous at times. When fan and parasol are laid aside and the cool breeze sweeps over the moonlit piazza, what so piquantly useful as picturesque as this gypsy-ish drapery! The black lace scarfs, somewhat too sombre for evening, but the handiest thing in the world for day, can be bought now in very pretty patterns, fair quality and size for $5.—N. Y. Times.

The Connemara Wraps.

The great Connemaras of black lace are to those with Spanish tastes the most beautiful and effective of the summer wraps. Although one leading house says: "We are not making them this year; they pull and sag, and are altogether unsatisfactory," yet very elegant ones are offered and purchased. There are variations of the Connemara in the full-length silk coats with Spanish sleeves of lace falling to the bottom, but the genuine peasant is the handsomest.—New York Times.

The Important Item of Sleeves.

Sleeves are the most serious item in dress this season. Beside sleeves, every other point connected with dress is dwindling into insignificance. They are of a contrast to the rest of the dress in color and material. The big velvet and plush sleeves of the spring now look uncomfortably hot and heavy. The sleeves of the summer dresses are made of silk, satin, brocade and lace. Silk sleeves are very pretty. On summer gowns they are frequently veiled with lace or covered with crab ridders.

Marvelous Beyond Precedent,

is the effect of Sozodont upon the whole economy of the mouth keeping the gums rosy and healthy, the teeth in perfect order, and giving the breath a balmy fragrance.

CHARITY THAT PAID.

This Narrative is Vouched for as Being a True Story of Gotham.

Young Mr. de B. is a broker, and like most men in his walk of life, generously disposed.

As he left his office one day last week he was accosted by a ragged, ragged, raggedly dressed man who requested the gift of fifty cents with which to purchase a dinner.

"Why should I give you fifty cents for your dinner?" asked young Mr. B. "What claim have you upon me?"

"None," said the beggar. "That is, no more than the hungry and penniless always have upon those who have something to spare."

"Do I look as if I had something to spare?"

"You are a broker," returned the alms seeker. "I never knew a broker who had nothing to spare to a hungry man."

"Why don't you go to work?"

"I may have to if you decline to assist me."

"That is strange. What is your work?"

"I'll tell you. I am a pickpocket, and I have just this afternoon been discharged from prison. I have no money, no friends. I am as I have said, hungry. You see what I am brought to. Starvation or crime. If I can get a good dinner I may be able to stave off the other alternative for awhile."

Young Mr. de B. was impressed naturally so, I think. Putting his hand into his trousers pocket, he drew forth a half-dollar and handed it to the ex-convict.

"There," he said, "there is your dinner. I shall be glad if I can save you from crime, even for a little while."

At this young Mr. de B. started on his way, but the beggar was at his elbow.

"I say, my friend," said he.

"Well?"

"Would you mind telling me the time?"

"There is the clock in Trinity steeple."

"I know that—but your time. What is it?"

Impatiently Mr. de B. felt for his watch. It was gone.

"I have been robbed," he cried.

"Precisely," said the ex-convict. "And here is the watch," taking it from the pocket of his greasy coat. "I took it while you were hesitating about giving me the half dollar. The Lord helps them that helps themselves, but He also helps them as helps others. Take your watch. I don't need it. You got it cheap."

And so saying, the beggar turned and walked down the street, and was soon lost to view.

Then young Mr. de B., replacing his timepiece in his pocket, sauntered homeward, thinking deeply all the while, and thanking his stars that being a broker he was, like most men in his walk of life, generously disposed.—Chatter.

His Intentions.

She—Sir, what do you mean?

The Culprit (smacking his lips and unabashed)—I mean to do it again if I get the chance.—Epoch.

CATARRH.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER a new cure continued.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Waste Not Precious Time,

BE quick. You cannot use a minute but once—make the most of it. Especially those who are suffering from dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, bad blood, or any disease of the stomach, liver or bowels. You cannot take Burdock's Blood Bitters too soon, every moment wasted delays the longed-for cure.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Changes of temperature and weather frequently upset persons who are most careful of their health, and particular in their diet. These corrective, purifying, and gentle aperient Pills are the best remedy for all defective action of the digestive organs. They augment the appetite, strengthen the stomach, correct biliousness, and carry off all that is noxious from the system. Holloway's Pills are composed of rare balsams, unmixed with baser matter, and on that account are peculiarly well adapted for the young delicate and aged. As this peerless medicine has gained fame in the past, so will it preserve it in the future by its renovating and invigorating qualities, and the impossibilities of its doing harm.

Read this extract from the scientific papers of Great Britain and Europe:

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle.

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and shunning effects. Do not fail an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit:

Alex. Burns, Sadbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the dropping into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

T. D. D. Loyd, 8 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the marvellous healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have prescribed myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shall not fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM INSTANTLY RELIEVES Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

NASAL BALM POSITIVELY CURES CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect satisfaction of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cents for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

DRUNK IN THE STREET.

"Drunk, your worship," the officer said:
"Drunk in the street, sir!" she raised her head,
A lingering trace of the olden grace
Still softened the lines of her worn worn face.
Unkempt and tangled her rich brown hair;
Yet with all the furrows and stains of care—
The years of anguish, and sin, and despair—
The child of the city was passing fair.
The ripe, red mouth, with lips compressed—
The rise and fall of the heaving breast—
The nervous fingers, so taper and small,
Crumple the fringe of the tattered shawl,
As she stands in her place at the officer's call.
She seemed good and fair, she seemed tender and sweet,
This fallen woman found drunk in the street.
Does the hand that once smoothed the ripple and wave
Of that tangled hair lie still in the grave?
Is the mother who pressed those red lips to her own
Dead to the pain of their smothered moan?
Has the voice that chimed with the lisping prayer
No accent of hope for the lost one there,
Bearing her burden of shame and despair?
Drunk in the street?—in the gutters found—
From a passionate longing to crush and drown
The soul of the woman she might have been—
To fling off the weight of a fearful dream,
And awake again in the homestead hard by
The wooded mountain that touched the sky;
To linger a while on the path to school
And catch in the depths of the limpid pool,
Under the willow shade, green and cool,
A dimpled face and a laughing eye,
And the pleasant words of the passer-by.
Ye men with sisters and mothers and wives,
Have ye no care for these women's lives?
Must they starve for the comfort ye never speak?
Must they ever be erring, and sinful and weak—
Staggering onward with weary feet,
Stained in the gutters, and drunk in the street.

LADY IANTHE'S CHOICE.

YET the young girl left the house in a state of bewilderment. She could not possibly understand what Lady Ianthe wanted with a companion. She spent a week at Hampstead very happily, the little Cyril growing more beautiful to her loving eyes every day, yet so fatally like him—the false, cruel, treacherous lover, who had stolen her heart away. Then she went back to the Dale House.

Her bewilderment lasted for a few days; then she began to understand why she was engaged. She had thought deeply over the matter.

"I am so young," she said—hardly twenty yet—and I seem to have seen so much of life. Among those I have known, I have not met one whose life was commonplace; whatever the surface might be like—plain, unvarnished, homely—underneath there have been the elements of a grand tragedy. Who that looked at Cleve House would have thought a broken-hearted woman lay dying there? Who that looked at Lake Cottage would have thought a blighted, miserable life had been almost brought to a close there? I shall never believe in the commonplace again. Lady Ianthe is an only daughter, beautiful, admired, but who knows what tragedy underlies the seeming quiet of that peaceful life?"

On the first day of her arrival she went into Lady Ianthe's dressing room. She was preparing for a ball; a superb dress lay ready, jewels were shining in their cases; the maid, Honor Preston, stood anxiously awaiting her young mistress's decision.

A servant had just brought two beautiful bouquets into the room, the first composed of the most costly exotics, with Lord Monford's compliments—the other of white lilies, sent by Mr. Clifford Raymond.

Mrs. Rymer, whose only occupation just then was arranging the white, soft plumage of a costly fan, looked up and watched her. She did not pay the least heed when Lord Monford's superb bouquet was taken in. She never even raised her eyes, or gave the least sign of having heard the name.

But it was far otherwise when Mr. Raymond's name was mentioned. She held out her hands for the flowers, a lovely smile playing round her lips, a tender light in her eyes, as though she were gazing upon something she loved.

She laid the sweet, white lilies on the table near her, and Silvia noted how her eyes lingered on them.

"Which bouquet will you carry, my lady?" asked the maid, in a calm, business-like voice.

"The white one," replied Lady Ianthe and the very tone of her voice was to Silvia like a caress.

"This is far more beautiful," said Honor; "these little pink bells are superb. See, my lady."

But Lady Ianthe made no reply; the business of the toilet went on, and in a short time was completed, the young girl herself looking beautiful as a vision.

"Where is my fan?" she asked, and Silvia placed it in her hands, thinking she spoke hurriedly. The maid stood ready with a perfumed opera cloak.

"Quick!" said my lady, impatiently, but before she had finished she flung it on, and rallied the countess, looking superb in satin and diamonds.

"You are dressed, Ianthe, that is well. We shall be late."

The calm, critical eyes looked at the young figure from head to foot with an expression of keen approval.

"Your dress is in excellent taste, but"—her eyes falling on the white lilies—"what pretty flowers have you there?"

The beautiful face flushed deepest crimson. She held her lilies in her hand.

"No one could call such flowers as these pretty, mamma; they are exquisite.

"They are very well for lilies; but when I heard Lord Monford had sent a bouquet, I expected something very different."

Lady Ianthe made no reply; she was evidently not intending to tell the real state of the case, when the countess, looking round, saw the rival bouquet lying all unheeded on a chair.

"What superb flowers," she said, "pray who sent these?"

Then Lady Ianthe raised her eyes to her mother's face.

"Lord Monford sent them," she replied.

"And these?" said the countess, pointing to the lilies.

Lady Ianthe's face flushed.

"These," she replied, clasping the lilies more tightly, "these came from Mr. Raymond."

"Put them away, Ianthe; they are really too common. They quite destroy the effect of your dress."

"I prefer them to the others," was the reply, and then the two ladies looked at each other.

"Lady Ianthe," said the countess, "you please yourself, of course; but if you persist in carrying those lilies, I refuse to take you to the ball."

The young girl turned away.

"I shall be pleased to stay at home, mamma," she said, quietly, and the countess, without another word, swept from the room.

CHAPTER XXIX.

A HOUSE WITH A MYSTERY.

Calmly as she had spoken, Lady Ianthe removed her jewels. The maid, standing by, with a puzzled, perplexed face, looked as though she hardly understood.

"Bring me a wrapper," said Lady Ianthe calmly, "and put this dress away."

When Honor had gone to do her bidding, Lady Ianthe turned to her companion.

"Mrs. Rymer," she said, pointing to the obnoxious bouquet, "will you oblige me by taking those flowers down-stairs and putting them into the fire?"

"Burn them!" repeated Silvia. "Oh Lady Ianthe, I could not; it seems to me as though they are living, and would cry out when the flames touched them."

"You are fanciful. If they did cry out I know what they would say!"

"What would it be?" asked Silvia.

"They would ask pardon for coming where they are not wanted. Seriously, Mrs. Rymer, do remove them; spare their lives if you do not wish to kill them; take them to your own room; you seem fond of flowers."

"I love them dearly," she replied, thinking of the roses and lilies, at Brae, and how lovingly she tended them. Lady Ianthe did not seem inclined to continue the conversation. Silvia took up the flowers and quitted the room, not, however, before she had seen the beautiful face bent over the lilies, and the lovely lips kissing them with endearing words.

Mother and daughter were equally well bred; they met on the morning after the little encounter amicably as usual, Lady Leeson talked of the ball; Lady Ianthe asked who was there.

"You must look to your laurels, Ianthe," said her mother, smilingly; "last year you were called 'La Reine Blonde,' this year I think Cecile Everington eclipses you."

"Does she? I do not find the role of queen very interesting; it may please her better."

"I think it will; she is a very charming girl. The Duke of Grifton, Lord Monford, and many of the best men in the room seemed quite enchanted with her. I felt half offended. Lord Reny told me you were not missed."

If the proud mother were trying to pique the proud daughter into anything like jealousy she did not succeed; the beautiful face was calm and unmoved as possible. They talked on, Lady Leeson telling anecdotes, Lady Ianthe listening and commenting, when the earl entered the room, and Silvia saw him for the first time. He started at the sight of the delicate, lovely face and deep mourning dress; then he spoke very kindly to Mrs. Rymer.

"Dispensing the ball!" he said carelessly. "How was it you did not go, Ianthe? I understood you were to accompany your mother."

"I displeased mamma," was the candid reply, "and she told me I had better remain at home."

"What did you do?" asked the earl, with a smile that was half a frown.

"I refused to take the bouquet Lord Monford sent me, and I wanted the one Mr Raymond brought. Mamma would not let me have it, so I stayed at home."

The Earl Leeson looked as though it would have been a great relief to him if he could have whistled aloud; as it was he contented himself by saying:

"If you are wise, Ianthe, you will follow your mother's wishes."

"But," she replied, raising her eyes to his with a charming smile, "I am not wise, papa, and, in that sense, never shall be."

Visitors came, and Mrs. Rymer left the room; wondering a little at what she had heard. Later on that day the countess sent for her. She closed the door of her dressing room, and seemed to have a great desire for a private and confidential conversation.

"Mrs. Rymer," she said gently, "I want you to tell me what my daughter did yesterday—last evening rather—with those flowers?"

Silvia half hesitated.

"Mind," she continued, "if I am asking you these questions, it is not that I want you to be a spy upon my daughter. It is in her true interest and as her best friend that I ask you the question. Of course, you can please yourself whether you answer me or not," she concluded, haughtily.

Silvia thought for a few minutes.

"Of course," she said, to herself, "a girl's mother must be her best friend. Oh, if I had but trusted mine, how different all my life would have been!"

"Have you decided upon answering me?" asked Lady Leeson, proudly.

Silvia looked up at her.

"Yes," she replied; "I was wrong to hesitate. Naturally, you must be the Lady Ianthe's truest friend."

The handsome face cleared; Lady Leeson looked pleased.

"You speak sensibly, Mrs. Rymer. I trust in you to find a sensible friend and ally."

"Lady Ianthe asked me to destroy the flowers sent to her by Lord Monford. The others she has most carefully preserved in her room."

Lady Leeson looked terribly angry.

"How am I to bring such a girl to reason?" she said to herself. Then aloud she continued:

"I thank you, Mrs. Rymer. I begin to understand that you are to be trusted. I shall soon tell you how constant dropping is to wear away a stone."

Lady Leeson was very diplomatic; she did not refer to the matter again; she was most cordial and friendly with her beautiful daughter yet Mrs. Rymer noticed that her conversation chiefly consisted of remarks about those fortunate girls who had married well, and pity for those who had done badly.

There was a mystery in this gorgeous mansion, there was a tragedy in this sumptuous home, where one would have thought racking care could not come.

One day, Silvia, having rapped at the door of Lady Ianthe's room, and hearing no answer, naturally concluded no one was there. She opened the door and went in, when suddenly Lady Ianthe sprung from her seat at the writing table and cried aloud. Her face in that one moment turned ghastly white, she took up the paper she had been writing and tore it into shreds. Then the mist of fear seemed to clear from before her eyes.

"How you frightened me, Mrs. Rymer," she said; "how cruelly you frightened me."

"No, I did not; I thought it was mamma, and I have destroyed my letter. I need not have done that. Do not startle me so again; my heart beats as though it would break."

Silvia saw she trembled so violently that she could hardly stand.

"One moral is, never to enter a room without sufficient warning, she said, laughingly; "another is, Lady Ianthe never write a letter that you are so terribly afraid of being seen."

She said the words gently not knowing how the earl's daughter would brook reproof from the humble companion.

Lady Ianthe sighed deeply.

"You are right," she said; "but when one is drawn into a web, one must get out of it."

Another day—it was warm, sultry, and oppressive—Lady Ianthe had gone into the dressing room, and asked Mrs. Rymer, of whom she was growing very fond, to go and read with her.

The heat was very great, and she unfastened the high, white bodice, and Silvia saw, while bending over her, round her neck a gold chain of peculiar workmanship. Silvia touched it.

"How pretty this is, Lady Ianthe," she said. "It is Venetian, is it not?"

She was astonished to see the beautiful face flush, and the glorious eyes grow tender and dim.

"It is Venetian," she replied; "but I did not know my chain could be seen. I must alter that."

"It is pretty enough to be seen and admired," said Silvia.

Lady Ianthe laughed. She took it in her slender white fingers and kissed it.

"I must hide it," she said. "Oh, if any one knew what my pretty chain held earthquakes would be nothing to it!"

And Silvia, looking at it, saw at the end a small silver bag. What could it hold that earthquakes should be nothing to it?

After that day she noticed how often Lady Ianthe, in speaking, in thinking, in reading, would touch the chain with her fingers, and when she did touch it, what a happy smile played round her lips!

What secret had this proud daughter of this proud earl? What mystery was infolded in this life, outwardly so calm and tranquil? What had gone wrong with her?

It was with no slight feeling of satisfaction that she noticed how much Lady Ianthe was beginning not only to like, but to trust her. She came to her one morning as Silvia was dressed, ready to go out on some little commission for Lady Leeson.

"Will you do me a favor?" she said; "will you post this letter for me?"

"I saw the post-bag only a minute ago on the hall table," replied Silvia, really believing Lady Ianthe did not know it was there.

"But that will not do; I want this posted unknown to any one." Mrs. Rymer looked distressed.

"Do not ask me, Lady Ianthe," she said; "I would do anything for you, but this looks like treason to Lady Leeson. Pray do not ask me."

For the first time Lady Ianthe bent her proud bright head, and kissed Silvia.

"You are true," she said; "true of heart, and I shall trust you."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

COMMON SENSE COMPLEXION.

Here is the advice a wise woman once gave to a girl friend who came to her for advice about her complexion.—

"I went once to a doctor to consult him about a slight eruption on my face, and what do you think he told me? That it was probably owing to dirt! I dirty? with my cold baths in the morning? I was furious, but when he explained himself was forced to acknowledge that he might be right. He said:—"In the first place a good many people do not use soap on their faces, claiming that it injures the skin. Now, soap is absolutely necessary to exudations of the skin, and the face certainly has more of these than the hands, and a good castile soap will not hurt any face. Then most of you fill a basin with water, soap yourselves, and wash and rinse in it. Why, don't you see that you are washing in the dirt you try to remove? And very little of it does come off, but, mingled with soap suds, stays on to dry and irritate the skin. The way to do is to soap and wash yourself in the first basinful, rinse out your washrag then in a fresh basinful without soap, and rinse in still a third water." By this time you will be nearly clean. Never wash just before being exposed to the air. I went home and thought the matter over. The advice was all I had for my three dollar visit, and I finally concluded that I might as well take it. In a week there was a decided difference, and people began to remark the improvement in my complexion. The first few trials left me feeling as if I had been flayed, but the skin gradually gained the silky texture peculiar to babies. I tell a number of women of this simple remedy, and it never failed in any case to do good.

A FOOLHARDY FEAT.

Another Crank Attempts to Swim the Niagara Rapids, and Narrowly Escapes Death.

NIAGARA FALLS, N. Y., July 4.—Samuel Smith, of Lewiston, N. Y., and John L. Soules, of North Muskegon, Mich., were to have endeavored to navigate the rapids of the Niagara River today in a boat, and if that was wrecked, by swimming the rest of the distance, but Smith weakened. Soules, not to disappoint the crowd, undertook the feat alone, but as some one had sent his boat adrift during the night, he had to enter the water in a swimming suit and cork jacket. By supreme efforts he managed to avoid the rocks until the railway suspension bridge had been passed. Below the bridge are two dangerous rocks, and against one of these he was thrown, but he managed to avoid the other. After getting clear of the rocks he disappeared from view for a few seconds, but struggled to the surface, and was quickly carried to a point opposite the incline railway, where an immense billow threw him into shallow water, and he was assisted ashore. It was found that in the collision with the rock one of his legs had been disabled, and he could not reenter the water and continue the journey through the whirlpool rapids, the most dangerous part of his trip. Had he gone fifty yards further he would have reached the spot where Captain Webb met his death. Soules will, as soon as he receives the use of his leg, reattempt the feat.

IT SHINES FOR ALL.

ORANGEVILLE, JULY 10, 1890.

Now that the board of health have determined to faithfully discharge their very responsible duties the council should not be dilatory in rendering them all the assistance possible. It will be a very hard matter to keep a town like this, where sewers are unknown, in a high sanitary standing. However, the board are attempting to make the best of a hard job.

TORONTO's grand summer carnival is over at last, and a grand, gigantic fizzle it was. The tables were turned on a number of Orangeville people who went to "take in the carnival, but were "taken in" by the carnival instead. Whenasked what the carnival was like, they replied in the most sarcastic language that they didn't see any. The Queen City is too huggish altogether, and if they keep on fooling the public by their alleged carnivals their industrial exhibition is sure to go to the wall.

PRISON REFORM INQUIRY.

OPENING SESSION OF THE COMMISSION HELD AT HAMILTON.

The Chairman States the Scope of the Investigation—Many Sheriffs and Jailers Present—Governor Ogilvie's Evidence as to the Hamilton Jail.

HAMILTON, July 9.—The Prison Reform Commission consisting of J. W. Langmuir (chairman), Hon. Timothy Anglin (Secretary), Hon. Charles Drury, Dr. A. M. Rosebrugh and A. F. Jury, met here to-day.

The commission was appointed by the Ontario Government in consequence of resolutions passed by the Prison Reform Conference held in Toronto last November, requesting the selection of a commission to investigate and report upon the question of prison reform, with the view of suggesting improved methods of dealing with the criminal classes, and their first session was held in the court house here at 11 o'clock this morning.

There was a large attendance of witnesses including Sheriff T. C. Dawson and Jailer Hamilton of St. Catharines, Sheriff James Smith and Jailer John Coulson of Welland, Sheriff McKellar and Jailer Ogilvie of Hamilton, Rev. T. Geoghegan, Rev. Father McFeely, W. L. Harries and Rev. J. M. Ross.

The chairman explained that the commission had a large scope, but would make inquiry especially on these points: 1, the cause of crime; 2, any improved means for preventing and combatting industrial schools; 3, improved means of rescuing destitute children from a criminal career; 4, improvements in the management of county jails and the management of prisoners; 5, the most fitting profitable employment for prisoners; 6, the question of indeterminate sentences for offenders against penitentiary laws; 7, improved way of dealing with tramps and habitual drunkards. The commission had chosen Hamilton to open its work as a centre of its prominence as a criminal centre, but simply because it was near Toronto.

Governor James Ogilvie of the Hamilton jail was the only witness this morning. He gave a long statement of the treatment and classification of the prisoners in his charge. He could not keep those awaiting trial separate from the sentenced offenders. He never knew of any cases being corrupted in his jail, in fact the boys used much worse language than the men. He had never heard old prisoners recounting their crimes to the younger men; on the contrary, they are very careful about talking of previous crimes, though they frequently tell how often they have done time. The Central Prison takes the worst prisoners away, and sometimes even the 30-day men are sent when they are short of labor at the Central.

The establishment of a municipal work house would reduce the number of prisoners in the jail, enable them to improve the classification and discipline of the jail. It would be an impossibility to adopt the cellular system in the Hamilton jail, because all the inmates of the cells in one corridor can speak to each other. He thought the isolation of prisoners would be cruel, would weaken their minds by brooding and injuriously affect the morals of prisoners.

Last year 401 prisoners were sent down for being drunk and disorderly, of whom about one-fifth were confirmed drunkards and they were hardened rather than reformed by the committals. He could not say that he knew one case where a committal to jail has had a deterrent effect on them. Drunkenness among women has largely decreased in recent years, due in his opinion to fear of the Mercer and also to the excellent work of Christian societies. Habitual drunkards may generally be locked upon as a burden on their families, not as supporters of their families. He would favor sending them to an inebriate asylum, where they would be subject to medical treatment, especially for men under thirty.

In his opinion the chief cause of crime is intemperance, with ignorance a good second. Illiterate children are usually the children of drunken parents. One of the grandest institutions for the prevention of crime among boys is the field sports instituted by the clergy of St. Matthew's, where the boys can assemble in the evenings and amuse themselves under supervision.

In answer to Mr. Drury the witness said that prisoners should have hard labor and that it should be hard hard. The jail here always has a large supply of stone on hand for this purpose. There was only one month in five years when there was no stone at the jail, and the news spread about so quickly that the jail was immediately overflowed with tramps.

A BAD MAN OF BERLIN

The Number of His Wives Is "Estimated" at Seven.

BERLIN, Ont., July 9.—High Constable Kloepfer yesterday arrested a man named Conrad Gutsche, charged with polygamy. It is claimed that he has now the seventh wife that she is living in this town. He is a well dressed German with a large amount of glib talk, and it appears found no trouble in gaining the affections of the gentler sex. He had a mania for widow women. The charge was laid against him by a Mrs. Roeke, a widow living in the north ward, to whom he proposed at first sight. She was interviewed by a reporter and told a rather amusing story, which is as follows:

About a month ago Gutwein visited Mrs. Roeke and made a proposal of marriage to her, but as she was not willing to accept without taking the matter into consideration and consulting her family he gave her two weeks time. At the end of the two weeks he called again and told her a altogether different story about owning a fifty-acre farm near Stratford, and said he was shortly to inherit $1,000. His prepossessing appearance and the offer to clear the debt on her property was too much for her and he soon won her affections, and the date for the marriage was fixed, which took place a week ago Sunday.

After they had been made one, Mrs. Gutwein No. 7 became suspicious, and on enquiry found that she only possessed a seventh part of his affections. Yesterday morning when he made his appearance she accused him of infidelity and polygamy and belabored him with a broom. Soon after this he was arrested. He will be tried on three charges, which will be made against him by Mrs. Wolf, Wellesley township, Mrs. Hildner, Wellesley township, and Mrs. Roeke, Berlin. He is about 50 years of age and is said to have married children living near Stratford. It is estimated that he has seven wives and about thirty children.

THE PIG QUESTION.

The members of the board of health were present ready to resign if some more stringent legislation wasn't enacted on the question of the town pigs. A communication was read from Sam Hughson, asking a by law to be passed prohibiting the keeping of pigs within the fire limits. Chairman Decatur addressed the council. He said it was utterly impossible to do anything in the way of improving the sanitary condition of the town unless the pigs were removed outside of the fire limits, and in some cases farther. The epistle was referred to a special committee consisting of Reeve Lindsay, Deputy reeve Endacott, Ald. Youmans and Bailey.

Chairman McLaren of the high school board sent in a communication requesting the withdrawal of a former request for a grant to heat and ventilate the school building. He asked in lieu that the old waterworks piping be given to carry the water away from the foundation of the school. The F. & W committee will inquire into the matter and act accordingly.

REPORTS.

Reeve Lindsay read the treasurer's statement for June.

Ald. Green presented the report of the Assessment committee which recommended that the $20 account of A. Hughson be settled for $15, to be deducted from Assessor Medley's salary. The report was adopted.

BY LAWS.

Ald. King introduced a by law to appoint a caretaker for the town cemetery. Mr. W. Fremlin was reappointed at a salary of $25 per year and $2 fees for each grave he digs.

FINISHING TOUCHES.

The mayor asked the chairman of the T. P. committee when he intended repairing the council chamber. "As soon as possible" was the reply.

New deeds of lots purchased by G. A. Campbell were ordered to be issued, Mr. Campbell having lost the originals.

The T. P. committee will rent the weigh scales by tender when the present lease expires, which will be very soon.

CHARGED WITH LARCENY.—Chief Shields journeyed to Hamilton on Monday and arrested Fawcett Bennett, a well known young man of this town, on a charge of receiving J. F Ewings of a gold watch and chain. The alleged theft is said to have taken place on the 1st of July. The chief and the suspected young man arrived in Orangeville on Tuesday evening, and P. M. Pattullo accepted bail to the amount of $1000. The case came up for trial before Mayor Walsh and P. M. Pattullo yesterday afternoon, but was adjourned until Friday next. How true the charge is remains to be seen.

POLICE COURT DOINGS.—Last Saturday afternoon was a rather busy day in police court circles, there being no less than five cases on the docket. Mayor Walsh and Police Magistrate Pattullo graced the bench, and measured out justice after the fashion adopted by John Baxter, J. P., of Toronto, Canada. The first case ventilated was that of Miss McKitrick, lately employed as a domestic at the Paisley house, against James Bennett for non-payment of wages. It appears Miss McKitrick agreed that $10 per month was sufficient remuneration for her services, while Mr. Bennett labored under the impression that the agreement was $8 per month. Judgment for the full amount of claim—$21—was rendered in favor of plaintiff. James Armstrong, W. M. Finlay, Thos. Boyle and George Broughton were charged with being drunk and disorderly on Broadway. Armstrong and Finlay each contributed $5 and costs, while Boyle and Broughton were let off with a fine of $2 and $1, respectively, besides costs.

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE!

Mrs. Hollinger Narrowly Escapes Being Killed at the C. P. R. Station on Monday.

A very serious though not fatal accident happened at the C. P. R. station here on Monday morning by which Mrs. Hollinger, wife of our station agent, narrowly escaped instant death. It appears the woman was in the act of crossing the tracks, when the yard engine was doing some shunting. What is called by railway men a "running shunt" was being made; that is the engine gave the cars a start and each came down different tracks. Mrs. Hollinger stepped on the track that the engine was on and watched the cars on the other. She did not perceive the engine coming down, and before it could be brought to a standstill, the tender struck her and threw her partially off the track, but not far enough from the rails to clear her left foot, which was badly mutilated by the wheels. She also received several serious gashes on her head and different parts of her body.

In less time than it takes to tell it a stretcher was brought from the freight sheds and the injured woman was quickly removed to her home near by. Dr. Henry arrived on the scene very shortly after the accident occurred, and he found it necessary to amputate part of the foot, which was accordingly done. Under skillful medical attendance she is doing as well as can be expected.

This is a very dangerous crossing and many narrow escapes are reported. This last accident has given rise to an agitation for gates with a view to prevent accidents in future.

The petition was accompanied with the necessary deposit of $200. Mr. J. U. Tetzel, Q. C., of Hamilton, filed the document. Solicitors for Toronto, Messrs. Mr. Stymour and his agents are charged with a variety of offences against the election laws, with bribing money on the north railway, intimidation, aiding personation and with violating the License Act.

Captain Fred Manley and his brother Hubert returned from Lewiston last evening on the Chicora, bringing over the remains of their father, who was accidentally drowned in the Niagara river on Monday evening. It is supposed that the old gentleman, after leaving his home in Maitland-street Monday, went to the wharf to take a boat for the island, as he had expressed such an intention to his daughter earlier in the week. It is also supposed that his mind being unsettled by his recent severe illness he got on the Niagara boat instead of the ferry and did not notice his mistake until the steamer was far out. On arriving at Lewiston he walked up to the vicinity of Brock's monument. He was very much exhausted at the time. He spoke to a man on the road and seemed to be suffering greatly. Shortly after his body was found in very shallow water. His hat was on his head. It is thought that he tumbled off the tank, and being so weak was unable to save himself.

For the six months ended June 30 there arrived at the five agencies in the Province of Ontario 22,502 immigrants; 6130 came via the St. Lawrence and 9,532 via the United States; 94,976 went to the United States, 61 to Quebec, 170 to Manitoba and 6525 remained in Ontario. The nationality of the latter is: English 3720, Irish 825, Scotch 979, German 367, Scandinavian 95, American 280, other countries 24. The totals for the same period of 1888 and 1889 were 54,319 and 48,319, of which 12,746 and 9016 remained in Ontario.

While several men were at work on a scaffold on a building in course of erection at Ulster-street and Euclid-avenue about yesterday afternoon the supports gave way and the workmen were precipitated to the ground, a distance of 35 feet. John Boyle of 57 Brunswick-avenue sustained serious internal injuries. Time ambulance was summoned and he was conveyed to the hospital. It is impossible as yet to say whether his injuries will terminate fatally.

William T. Humphrey, aged 13, son of Thomas R. Humphrey, contractor, 3 Queen-street east, went bathing in the bay above Winchester-street bridge yesterday with a companion named John Schaefer. He either misjudged his depth or was seized with cramps and sank to the bottom. Young Schaefer gave an alarm and the body was recovered an hour afterwards by Superintendent Bulmer of the Necropolis and conveyed to his father's residence, 791 Church-street. The funeral will take place to Mount Pleasant cemetery to-morrow.

Ontario Government Appointments.

Fighting the Beer Syndicate.

ST. LOUIS, July 9.—The English syndicate that purchased 17 St. Louis breweries is somewhat disappointed. The brewers were bound by cont act not to go into the brewery business for 10 years. Every president was made a manager at salaries of not less than $5000 a year. Orders have since been served by the legal representatives of the executive committee cutting these salaries down to $3000 and dismissing several managers. The retrenchment saves nearly $100,000 a year in salaries and cuts off 12 high-priced employes. The three non-syndicate breweries are taxed to their capacity and the sellers are exasperated. At a secret meeting held a few days ago it was decided to start three new breweries to fight the syndicate.

Cold, cough, coffin is what philosophers term "a logical consequence." One is very liable to follow the other; but curing the cold with a dose of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, the cough will be stopped and the coffin not needed—just at present.

"There was a frog who lived in a spring,
He caught such a cold he could not sing."

Poor, unfortunate Batrachian! In what a sad plight he must have been. And yet his misfortune was one that often befalls singers. Many a once tuneful voice among those who belong to the "genus homo" is utterly spoiled by "cold in the head," or on the lungs, or both combined. For the above mentioned "croakers" we are not aware that any remedy was ever devised, but we rejoice to know that all human singers may keep their heads clear and strong in tone by the timely use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, both of which are sold by druggists.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh in the Head, no matter of how long standing, while for all lurking, bronchial, throat, and lung affections, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is positively unequaled. It cures the worst lingering coughs and builds up the flesh and strength of those who have been reduced by wasting diseases. It is guaranteed to benefit or cure in all cases for which it is recommended, if taken in time and given a fair trial, or money paid for it refunded.

RUN ON THE FARO PLAN.

"Mining Stock Exchange" Raided by the Police.

[illegible], July 9—The police to-day raided the "Mining Stock Exchange" at 61 [illegible] and captured two of its officials and a large amount of paraphernalia. George W. Rumble, the president of the "Exchange," and James W. Waldron, a broker who is interested in the business, were taken into custody. The people connected with the place and a number of stock speculators escaped.

The "plant" of the "game" consisted of a [illegible] room, a big blackboard containing the names of alleged California mining stock, a little rubber hole labelled "Clearing House," a [illegible] young man who acted as "[illegible]" for the faro game and some "[illegible] pigeons" who posed as members of the exchange. These were the principal actors. In addition there was a youth who chalked up bogus quotations, a cashier hidden in the recesses of the "Clearing House" and an elderly gentleman apparently president of the exchange who explained the modus operandi to customers.

The names of the stocks dealt in at this exchange are the Maple, Zenia, Mak-saw-ba, Alpine, Orange and Yorke. A chalked up notice on the blackboard declares that these comprise the well-known Orange group of mines, all in mountains located in Southern California and which produce from $4000 to $40 a day.

The prices of these stocks fluctuate rapidly. At one time, for instance, the penny falls or rises a half-dozen points in as many minutes, and the Yorke is a regular Jonah to those who bet on it on small margins. The stock in the exchange mine will fall as a paper collar in July even when the mine is at its acme of prosperity. Even when the Maple is shut down and has produced nothing for months the shares sometimes rise just as if she were a dividend payer.

These remarkable changes are caused by the first that any young man at the "fly" [illegible] the "[illegible]" changes dictate the price of shares in a box, on which is written the remarks "Advance Mak-saw-ba," "Decline Alpine," "Lower Alpine," etc. These the "fly" young man draws out [illegible] at the rate of about [illegible] a minute as he reads the legends thereon aloud to the blackboard. ## Bank of Hamilton.

Eighteenth Annual Meeting of Shareholders—President's and Cashier's Reports.

The eighteenth annual meeting of the shareholders of the Bank of Hamilton was held on Tuesday, June 17th. There was a good attendance of the shareholders. Mr. A. G. Ramsay took the chair, in the absence of Mr. Stuart, the president.

The following report of the directors was presented:

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS.

The directors beg to submit their eighteenth annual report to the shareholders for the year ended 31st May, 1890:

| The profits for the year ended 31st May, 1890, after deducting charges of management and making full provision for all bad and doubtful debts, are | | 140,827 41 |
| | | $146,252 54 |
| From which has been declared— Dividend 4 per cent., paid 2nd December, 1889 | $40,000 00 | |
| Dividend 4 per ct., payable 2nd June, 1890 | 40,000 00 | 80,000 00 |

| Carried to rebate on current bills discounted | 1,000 00 | |
| Written off bank premises and office furniture account | 2,835 42 | 33,835 42 |
| Balance of Profit and Loss carried forward | | $19,317 12 |

The steady and healthy growth of the bank's business has continued during the past year and with fairly profitable results.

The Cayuga agency, having failed to develop a satisfactory volume of business or sufficient profit to make its continuance worth while, has been closed. A new agency has been opened at Chesley, in the county of Bruce, with apparent promise of success.

The directors have decided to proceed with the erection of a new bank building which was contemplated when the sight at the corner of King and James streets was acquired a few years ago. Plans have been prepared and the more important contracts let for a solid stone building of suitable design and construction.

JOHN STUART, President.

Bank of Hamilton,
Hamilton, 31st May, 1890.

J. TURNBULL, Cashier.

Mr. Ramsay in presenting the report said: During the past year I deeply regret to say our bank has lost one of its directors, one of the most valuable of the board, in the person of the late Senator James Turner. He had been identified with the bank for many years and gave much of his attention to it. The board of directors, despite of the loss caused by his death, feel are glad to be able to say that they were fortunate in securing as their man in the person of Mr. A. R. Lee, of Toronto, to take the place of the deceased on the board, and in connection with our Toronto branch I am pleased to state that his name has been a valuable addition to the company's board for this branch has already proved a great success. As you will see from the report the year has been one of satisfactory progress. The profits of this year have exceeded the profits of last year by several thousand dollars and we have been able to carry to the reserve fund $50,000, which as last year the amount carried to this fund was only $40,000 and still there is an amount slightly over $30,000 carried forward to the profit and loss account. You will observe in reference to the position of the bank that we have at the present time assets which reach the sum of $6,010,277.04. Last year the amount was $5,750,000, so that there has been an increase during the year of about $260,000, which I dare say you all will agree is quite satisfactory. The amount of discount business done by the bank was very large, giving employment of a considerable amount. In reference to the future of the bank it is of course impossible for me to say it nicely but we have every reason to hope and expect that it will be more prosperous than ever in the future. There has been great promise throughout the country. As far as the crops are concerned I might say that the prospect is such as to give us strong hopes. I am sure the bank will be able to maintain the position it holds in our city and among the institutions of the land. With those remarks I have much pleasure in moving the adoption of the report which has been presented.

Mr. George Roach said: Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen, In rising to second the adoption of the report it is unnecessary for me to take up much of your time. The statement of the affairs of the bank for the year is before you, and the remarks which have been so ably made by our vice-president give you any further information you desire, but there is one clause I would like to say a word about. It is the clause in reference to the reserve fund, which has during the year been increased by $50,000 and which now amounts to $650,000. This must be a source of great satisfaction to all and an additional ground for public confidence. The motion was put to the meeting and carried.

Col. Charles Magill then arose and said: Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I have great pleasure in moving "that the thanks of this meeting be given to the president, vice-president and directors for their services during the year." Continuing, he said: I have very much pleasure in moving this resolution, for I believe that our worthy directors are deserving of the confidence and esteem of every shareholder.

Mr. F. W. Gates said: Mr. Chairman and Fellow directors,—I have very much pleasure in seconding the motion conveying our thanks to the president, vice-president and directors. Our worthy chairman has drawn your attention to the large amount of discount business. I would like to point out that that branch of the business has been most carefully and prudently managed. The profits of the bank, too, have been satisfactory, more so than many larger banks. I am glad that the directors are taking steps towards the erection of a new bank building, as pointed out in the report. No person doing business in the bank can help but observe that the present premises are not suitable for the extent of the business, and I am sure we will heartily endorse the action of the directors in this respect. I have, therefore, much pleasure in seconding the motion.

Mr. Melvin at this stage arose and said: Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I may say that in supporting the motion I do so, not because of any personal acquaintance with any of the members of the board of directors for I have not had the pleasure of knowing them, but I have been watching the progress and affairs of the bank and have been well satisfied, indeed highly pleased with them. There is no bank, I think, which stands as well as the Bank of Hamilton does to-day, and that is saying a great deal for the directors. The Bank of Hamilton is one in which the stock is always a good investment. I am glad to see, as Mr. Gates has remarked, that the directors are going on with the new building, and just here I would like to give a word of caution. I find that one of the weak points of companies sometimes is that, when they have been prosperous, they want to make a big show in buildings. I would like to know if the item of $100,000 in the assets for "bank premises, office furniture, safes, etc." includes only this property.

Chairman Ramsay informed him that it included the whole of the bank's property, and said: The remarks of Mr. Melvin afford occasion for me to remark that the board of directors are fully impressed with the advisability of observing prudence in this respect, and no unnecessary expenditure will be incurred. The motion was then put and carried.

Moved by Adam Brown, M. P., seconded by F. W. Fearman, "That the thanks of this meeting be given to the cashier, assistant cashier, agents and other officers of the bank for the efficient performance of their respective duties."

In offering the resolution Mr. Brown said: In submitting this motion to you I must say what everyone will admit that the success of the Bank of Hamilton has been due, in a very large degree, not only to the cashier, but to all the officers of the institution in Hamilton and the agencies in other places.

Mr. F. W. Fearman—I have much pleasure in seconding that motion, and I wish to reiterate all that has been said in praise of our cashier and officers. The officials of this bank are noted for their courtesy to customers and loyalty to the institution, and that is a reason why the bank is so popular. I have therefore much pleasure in seconding the motion.

Mr. A. G. Ramsay—In putting this motion I would just add that every one of the directors most heartily agree with all that has been said. The motion was carried unanimously.

Mr. J. Turnbull, cashier of the bank, replied: He said, Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I have very great pleasure in returning thanks for the kind and, as to myself, too flattering resolution you have passed. I must say, however, that the other officers of the bank have been most loyal. Without their co-operation I could do little. The employees in the bank are above the average, and I can truthfully say that I have never been in a service in which the officers were more energetic, capable and willing and able to co-operate. The year that is past has been favorable. In the last two years we have closed two branches and opened three. It has been the policy to keep the bank well in hand and see that its progress was sure.

Mr. A. T. Wood then presented a motion. It was as follows: "That by-law No. 1 be amended by striking out the word 'Tuesday' in the 5th line, and inserting 'Monday' in the place thereof."

In submitting it, Mr. Wood said: Gentlemen—There is a resolution in my hand which I have pleasure in moving. You are all aware that a number of banks holding their meetings on the same date makes it impossible for gentlemen to attend meetings which they would like to. There are four banks in Toronto holding their meetings to-day, and some of the gentlemen here would doubtless like to be there, while some who are at the meetings in Toronto would like to be with us. We have considered the advisability of the change, and now propose it so as to give those who may wish an opportunity of attending other meetings. The change is simply one of one day—from the third Tuesday to the third Monday in June. Mr. John Proctor seconded the motion which was unanimously adopted.

It was then moved by Mr. W. B. McDonald, seconded by Mr. Meyer, that a poll be opened for the election of directors.

Mr. Meyer, in seconding the motion, said, I take this opportunity in endorsing what has been said about the officers of the bank and the cashier. He has spoken concerning the conservative position that has been taken in regard to the affairs of the bank, and I, as a Conservative in politics, can say that the proper course has been taken. I regret also that old director, Hon. James Turner, has been called away, and rejoice that we have secured another who we know will be a gain to the institution.

The scrutineers, Messrs. John Riddel and David Kidd, declared the following gentlemen duly elected directors for the ensuing year: Messrs. John Stuart, A. G. Ramsay, George Roach, John Proctor, Chas. Gurney, A. T. Wood and A. R. Lee.

At a subsequent meeting of the directors Mr. John Stuart was elected president and Mr. A. G. Ramsay vice president for the ensuing year.

THE ARMLESS MAN.

Dick Aborty was an armless man;
At you his word to say
His business in life began
In quite an awkward way.

To be with shoulders unadorned
His reason never charmed;
He thought if he had been forewarned
He might have been forearmed.

Sometimes, when reasoning o'nights
Upon his natal theft,
He'd say he never got his rights
'Cause both his arms were left.

And if you'd ask how nature came
His awkwardness to brand,
He'd shout, with jocular acclaim,
"'Twas done by slight of hand!"

But Dick was happy as could be;
His loss ne'er made him greet;
His consolation 'twas that he
Was handy with his feet.

'Twas comfort to him, too, whene'er
He'd reason 'twas his doom
To be in crowds, to think he ne'er
Would want for elbow room.

Nor could it ever be his fate,
His worldly journey thro',
To meet with some injustice great
He'd have to knuckle to.

A hero he, of valiant fame,
For—strange indeed the case—
There ne'er a deed of daring came
That he would not undrace.

And when, in heat of mortal strife,
He bowed to death's alarms,
Said he, "Tho' I lay down my life
I'll ne'er lay down my arms."

A SAD REASON FOR TEARS.

There sat a silly little lass
Upon a bed of pansies,
Her tears bedewed the summer grass
And twinkled on the roses.

"Now, why is all this grief?" I said,
"And all this doleful crying?"
The maiden sadly shook her head,
And answering, softly sighing,

"All yesterday I wept—yes, I did,
And then this morning I cried—
'Twas quite without reason
So now I mourn the stupid war
In which I spent the lovely day—
The fairest of the season."

"O dear—O dear—O dear—O dear—
The fairest of the season!"

So there she sat, the silly lass,
And nothing could console her,
The roses and the morning grass
Go green of comfort for her.
Nor any word I have to say
Would ease her doleful sorrowing
I can but weep to-day with her
She answer'd, sadly sighing,

"Two all—O dear—O dear—I know
And that is not the worst—and she,
The hot me greatest sorrow
I can not eat—I cannot sleep—
And all the day I weep and weep—
I'll lose I know, I'm sorry
O dear—O dear—O dear—
I fear I'll weep to-morrow!"

SUNBEAMS.

The most trying experience in a pig's career is his conversion into lard.

The genius who covers himself with glory must have some dry goods also.

Four rods makes one rood, but one rod can take the rudeness out of quite a number.

A lady who owns a cat that scratches a great deal has given it the descriptive name of "Clawed."

Miss Phillis—"I wonder why young Wealthy stares at me." Her mother—"That's the first step of love, dear."

Old lady (to newsboy)—You don't chew tobacco, do you, little boy? Newsboy—No, ma'am, but I kin give you a cigarette.

Sweetum—"She smiled on my new suit, Robbins, old boy." Robbins—"Well, I think she might. The wonder is she didn't go into hysterics."

The inestimable value of Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a blood purifier should be known to every wife and mother. It corrects irregularities, gives tone and strength to the vital organs and cleanses the system of all impurities. The best family medicine.

"Are these complexion powders warranted fast colors?" "Well, madam, I cannot say that they will wash like the natural complexion, but they won't rub off on a coat sleeve."

"She has the disposition of a flannel shirt." "What on earth do you mean?" "She is a shrinking little thing."

Funny, when a man puts on a high hat for the first time, he'll duck his head at a door casing that he could not reach with a step ladder.

The Beginning of Death.

Disease is the beginning of death, and approach should be met at once by appropriate remedies. No better means exist than the use of Burdock Blood Bitters whenever symptoms of any disease of the stomach, liver, bowels or blood appear. B.B.B. is the best life preserver.

Gilks—"Why did you change your seat at the ball game to-day?" Hobbs—"Cobbs sat by my side and kept pounding me to call my attention to good plays."

First club man—"What time did you get home last night? Do you remember?" Second club man—"I ought to; my wife has told me about fifteen times to-day."

The question came up in a gathering of ladies the other day, "When does a woman cease to love candy?" but as no lady who died was present there could, of course, be no definite decision.

"Let's play census, Willie." "I don't know how." "Why, say, Fossie, you ask me all the sassy questions you can and I tell you it's none of your business and set Fido on you."

Tom's little cousin, Maud, described graphically her sensation on striking a dimpled elbow on the bed carving: "Oh, my!" she sighed, "mamma, I've struck my arm just where it makes stars in my fingers!"

Prof. Loisette's Memory Students treating greater interest than ever in all parts of the country, and persons wishing to improve their memory should send for his prospectus free as advertised in another column.

THE WORST DEAD ALL THE ISMS

"Don't talk to me about your rheumatisms," said a facetious old valetudinarian, "I tell you there's no ism on earth so bad as Rheumatism." The venerable sufferer was right. St. Lawrence's gridiron or Quattlemagin's pallet of fire was not more emphatically a bed of torment than the agony of the mighty rheumatism. It is generally conceded by the faculty one of the most obstinate as well as one of the most painful of maladies, and hitherto it has resisted all remedies. Immediate and extraordinary improvement, still not always, however, a great step of progress, seem to master all opposition; and even this painful disease, entrenched among the muscles and articulations as it were, with the sinews and tendons of our frames, is compelled to yield to the curatives then here provided.

We have it on unquestionable authority—the testimony of patients themselves—that rheumatism, however deeply seated, may be cured by the regular and persistent application of Holloway's Ointment. This, we feel assured, will be welcome intelligence to thousands of sufferers, bed-ridden by the disease, or limping with stiffened joints along the pathway to the tomb. In a climate where the quicksilver sometimes makes a leap of thirty degrees up or down, the complaint is of course a prevalent one; in our new settlements at the West, along the alluvial borders of our great rivers, in the hemlock swamps of the South, and in all low and damp locations, few persons reach the age of forty years without rheumatic visitation. It is clear, therefore, that a preparation which will afford immediate relief, and effect eventually a thorough cure of the complaint, must be of especial value to the people of all countries. We cannot reasonably doubt, in view of the well attested statements which have been laid before us, and which as they are by circumstances within our own knowledge, that the Ointment referred to will effect that object; and among all the benefits which the discoveries of that celebrated physician and philanthropist have conferred upon mankind, this is certainly not the least important. Many an industrious toiler of the soil, whose services are needed in the field, is at this moment languishing on a bed of sickness; the hands that should guide the plow or grasp the spade rendered powerless by Rheumatism. Many a toiler in every branch of productive labor is similarly situated, and we can imagine with what joy these sufferers would hail the means of immediate cure. To all such we feel justified in recommending this balsamic remedy, the application of which with the aid of a few doses of Holloway's Pills to regulate the internal organs, would, we feel assured, restore them to health and usefulness.—Daily Argus.

Distrustful People

Make an exception in favor of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is known to be a sure cure for diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera morbus and all bowel complaints. Those who use it do so regard it as the most reliable medicinal remedy obtainable.

CATARRH,

INTERNAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER A NEW AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or ointment, but a medicine to be sent by eminent physicians on receipt of a pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

A Canadian Favorite.

THE season of green fruits and summer drinks is the time when the worst forms of cholera morbus, diarrhœa, and bowel complaints prevail. As a safeguard Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry should be kept in the house. For 53 years it has been the most reliable remedy.

☞ A nice line of Gold Spectacles and Eye Glasses at Fox's.

Cotton Root Compound,

Composed of Cotton Root, Tansy and Pennyroyal—prepared by an old physician. Is successfully used monthly by thousands of women and has been prescribed in a practice of over 30 years. Price, $1. Will be mailed to any address in Canada and U. S. Doctor's consultation hours, 9 to 11 and 2 to 4. Diseases of women treated only. Sealed particulars, two stamps. Ladies only, address POND LILLY COMPANY, No. 3, Fisher Block, 131 Woodward Avenue, Detroit, Mich.

AN ACORN LESSON.

A strong wind blew, a chill wind blew,
And the little brown acorn where he grew
Shivered, and then into the air
Leaped and fell, he knew not where—
Fell, as it proved, where covered deep
Lay the crocus bulbs in their winter sleep.

The acorn spring there, small and brown,
Said, "Ah, it is well that I came down
Where little dark people live like me;
They are those that fall before, may-be,
So he nestled under a bit of sod,
With them to dream and dream and nod.

Presently he became aware
A bright hot light was in the air,
But what were his little neighbors at?
One stood there in a purple hat,
Another had a golden vest,
And another in snow-white gown was drest.

Great was the envious acorn's grief,
And he sobbed, "I haven't a single leaf;
I am homely and dull and slow and cold,
While all about me are capped in gold,
To be praised and loved, and no one cares
How the plodding, hidden acorn fares!"

One month, and the blossoms all were dead,
But a tiny root, like a small white thread,
Came from the acorn's doubting heart.
This was a hope at last, a start:
Yet when the season faded, lo,
Four leaves were all he had to show.

For a spring or two, a brief, bright space,
The crocus flowers made gay the place;
But the puny bulbs died out at length,
While the oak-sprout, adding strength to strength,
Had grown to be that joy to see—
A broad-limbed, high-topped, leaf-crowned tree.

Under his boughs the children played,
And travellers loitered within the shade,
Forgetting in that, that once of old,
Had crocuses round there, capped in gold.
The lesson is—not by a single stroke
Of fate can an acorn become an oak.

CHAPTER XXX.

A RUINED MAN.

MRS. RYMER had been nearly six weeks at Dale House, without being any nearer to solving the mystery than she was at first. Then Lady Leeson sent for her one day, and she saw the time had come when she was to know why she had been engaged as companion to Lady Ianthe.

The countess looked into her face with a smile as she entered.

"I asked you to come to my dressing-room," she said, "because I want to speak to you privately and confidentially. I want to trust you. I am a good reader of character, and I have read yours. You have a secret in your life—that much I can tell. But I have no wish to know it. I trust you implicitly. Of course you can ruin us. If you betray my secret you can ruin us; but I would trust you even more than I do now did occasion require it."

"You do me justice," said Mrs. Rymer, with simple candor. "If I have no other good quality, at least I have that—I am quite trustworthy."

"Now sit down," said the countess. "We shall not be interrupted, Mrs. Rymer. That which I am going to tell you must never repeat, I only ask your word."

"That I pledge you," she replied. "Nothing shall induce me to reveal one word of what your ladyship may say to me."

The countess gave a great sigh. It was as though a mask had suddenly fallen from her face—a mask the falling of which left her older and care-worn, with lines on her brow, and a piteous quivering on her proud lips. It seemed to her such a relief that she was to tell the truth, even though it was to this humble companion.

"Mrs Rymer," she said, "my husband, the Earl of Leeson, one of the proudest peers in England, is a ruined man."

Her voice seemed to die away on her lips as she said the words. Silvia looked up in utter wonder. The master of this magnificent house, this superb mansion, ruined man! It was not possible.

"How it has happened," said Lady Leeson, "does not matter. My lord was imprudent, not wicked—only weak and imprudent. His affairs would right themselves in the course of time, but that there is a heavy mortgage upon his property. Do you understand enough of business to know what a mortgage is?"

"Yes," replied Silvia; "I understand it quite well."

Lady Leeson continued—"There is a mortgage of eighty thousand pounds on the Leesdale estates, and of twenty thousand on this mansion, plate etc. The interest alone is enormous, and it takes a large income, but that is not the worst of it. If that money never had to be paid, we might do; but if the mortgage should be suddenly called in we are ruined beyond all redemption. Do you see?"

"Yes," she replied, gravely; "I understand."

"This mortgage money was lent—through our lawyers, of course—by Lord Monford. He is very wealthy—one of the richest men in England, I should imagine—and I fancy that he loves money.

"When we borrowed this my husband did not know who advanced it. It was money Lord Monford's solicitor had to put out at interest; but they thought I suppose, that a mortgage on Leesdale was as secure as anything still could be."

She paused for a few minutes, then went on in a dry, hard voice:

"It was hard for us, very hard; but there seemed no help for it. I must tell you also, that it was agreed this money should not be called in without a year's notice. Six months ago this notice came and then Lord Leeson knew himself to be a ruined man;—where and how was he to get a hundred thousand pounds? But Lord Monford's advisers had seen a better way of investing the money—one that would bring in a higher rate of interest; so we decided that the blow must fall, nothing could avert it. What the decision cost us who shall ever know?

"My lord said it was useless for the world to know before there was any need so that we should come up to London and enjoy our last season.

"I must tell you at Leesdale Park we have some neighbors called Raymond. They live on a pretty little estate called Pentons. They are good, worthy country people, not remarkable in any way—neither very aristocratic, very rich, nor very clever; but they have a son called Clifford, and this Clifford, I must say, is handsome and accomplished.

"Being neighbors, we have, of course seen a great deal of the Raymonds. Clifford and my daughter Lady Ianthe were very great friends, little lovers, and all that kind of thing—I, of course, looked upon it as childish folly that would be forgotten when they grew up.

"When we came to London our hearts full of distress and trouble that was carefully hidden from the world, my husband told me to cheer up. 'Ianthe is so beautiful,' he said, 'so greatly admired, she may marry well, and then help may come for us.' He was always most sanguine over her beauty, and the good fortune it might bring us.

"That which we thought in our blindness the most fortunate thing upon earth happened. Lord Monford saw Lady Ianthe, and at once fell deeply in love with her. When he came to lay his proposals before Lord Leeson, I saw tears of gratitude in my husband's eyes.

"'We are saved,' he whispered to me; 'Monford loves Ianthe, and wants to marry her before the season is over.'

"I, too, was thankful, Mrs. Rymer. You can never understand what a reprieve it was. That night for the first time for many months, I slept soundly, without the fear of disgrace and shame.

"On the day following, Lord Leeson sent for Lady Ianthe and told her. You must understand that we had said nothing to her of our troubles, nor does she know them yet. It seems too hard to weigh down a young life so heavily.

"What was our grief, our dismay, when Ianthe, in the most positive manner, refused to hear anything of it.

"At least,' said her father, 'you will tell us why.' And then she told us that she considered herself engaged to Clifford Raymond, that she loved him, and would not consent to break the engagement.

"I thought my husband would have gone distracted. He persuaded, implored—all in vain. She would not hear of it; still, by my advice, he refrained from telling her the state of our affairs."

"Was it wise, do you think Lady Leeson, to keep it from her?"

"I thought so then; I think so now. She is so proud that I believe, knowing how we are situated would cause her at once to refuse Lord Monford, and would make her marry Raymond. I shall try every other influence. Then, if nothing avails, I will appeal to her to save us; but I wish to avoid that extremity if I can."

"Does she like Lord Monford?" asked Mrs. Rymer, with a rush of warm pity through her heart.

"No," was the calm reply; "I do not think she does; but that would not matter. In affairs of this kind we cannot afford to study likes and dislikes."

"Yet it is for her whole life, Lady Leeson—her whole life."

"She will not be the first who has made a similar marriage, yet has been happy in it," replied Lady Leeson. "And now I tell you, Mrs. Rymer, what I mean by constant dropping wearing away stone. I want you to talk to her continually about the advantages of marrying Lord Monford, whenever you get an opportunity, and at all times; then by degrees I think she will become accustomed to it. Do you understand?"

CHAPTER XXXI.

A CAPTURED SUITOR.

Mrs. Rymer listened in grave silence, she made no reply.

"Well," asked Lady Leeson, almost impatiently, "what do you think?"

"I will do my best; but Lady Ianthe is proud, she will not brook much interference."

"I know that; therefore it occurred to me that constant presence of some one who, without any seeming interference or seeming interest would continually advocate the cause of Lord Monford, would be about the most sensible course we could adopt; that friend we have found in you."

"I have not yet seen either of the gentlemen," said Mrs. Rymer.

"You will have an opportunity to-morrow. We receive a few friends in the evening, and they are sure, both of them, to be present. You can say what you think to Lady Ianthe about them, but mind you speak in the right interest always on the right side, and then you will see the good effect of your influence."

Mrs. Rymer still looked doubtful.

"I will do my best," she repeated; "but I am not very sanguine."

"I am," repeated her ladyship. "I know what follows when one constantly hears the same thing. You will keep my counsel? Do not breathe one word of what I have said to you; and remember—please, remember, that Lady Ianthe must know nothing of the real circumstances, until we have tried everything else, and everything else has failed."

Silvia left Lady Leeson. There was a weight on her heart, a sense of coming evil and sorrow, that she could not repress.

"It will not end well," she said to herself. "No good ever came of forcing a girl's inclination. If I were Lady Leeson, I should tell her the truth, and let her sacrifice herself, if she would."

"You will come into the drawing room this evening, Mrs. Rymer," said Lady Leeson, with a gracious bow, on the morning following.

Lady Ianthe looked up, surprised at her mother's unusual kindness, and Silvia felt her face grow crimson under the calm, clear gaze of those eyes.

Lady Leeson was gifted with great tact. She said nothing to her daughter as to dress, toilet, or even making her appearance. She took it all for granted in a serene, queenly kind of fashion, that nothing disturbed.

When evening came Silvia fancied herself in a new world.

Cleve House had not been famous for the brilliancy of its entertainments, but here the gorgeous saloons and reception rooms were thrown open and brilliantly illuminated. She looked around on the splendor, the luxury, the magnificence.

"Who could believe," she said to herself, "that a bankrupt earl lived here?"

She had no evening dresses, but she wore one of black crape, through which her beautiful shoulders and arms shone like snowdrops; her fair, delicate face and wealth of golden hair made her conspicuously beautiful. Many gentlemen thought her the most lovely woman in the room. Lady Ianthe wore a very beautiful dress of pale lilac, with bouquets of lilac fastening the white clouds of lace, and a superb wreath of the same sweet flowers on her head. Silvia looked anxiously for the two gentlemen. The rooms began to fill. Lord Monford was the first announced; his appearance pleased her at once. He did not look like a man too fond of money; he had a strong, shrewd, sensible face—clearly cut, intelligent, with firm, well closed lips, and honest eyes. Perhaps not a young lady's most romantic ideal, but for all that, a thorough English gentleman. She liked him at first sight.

"That is a man I could trust," she said to herself. She saw him go to Lady Ianthe, who received him very coldly, but he did not seem to mind that. She was thinking of him so intently, that it was almost a shock to her to find his eyes, full of admiration, fixed upon her. He said something to Lady Ianthe, evidently asking who she was. Then Lady Ianthe rose, and then they crossed the room to speak to her. Lady Ianthe introduced them, and Silvia was surprised that Lord Monford seemed to ask nothing better than to sit by her side and talk to her; she never once remembered that the delicate, graceful loveliness of her face and figure was sure to attract attention. Lord Monford was very pleased with her. He was just telling her some little anecdote when Mr Raymond was announced, and Silvia looked up in haste, her face full of eager interest.

"Do you know that gentleman?" inquired Lord Monford.

"No," she replied, with some confusion. "Why do you ask?"

"I fancied you seemed very much interested in him," he replied. Then her face flushed, but she could not tell him that interest arose from the fact that she knew they were rivals.

There was no coldness on Lady Ianthe's face now; it broke into a thousand gleams of tenderness; the light that came into it was dazzling in its beauty. No need to ask whom Lady Ianthe loved best; there was not a tone of her voice, not a look of her eyes, that did not tell the secret.

Looking at the two men, and judging calmly, Silvia felt that Clifford Raymond was handsomer; indeed, he was a model of manly beauty—few men surpassed him; but his face had not the strength, the sense, the truth of his rival's. He looked like a man who could be easily led, who would sacrifice most things to his own pleasure and inclination; there was nothing heroic about him.

"Every one to her taste," said Mrs. Rymer, "but Mr. Raymond is certainly not to mine."

Some one else evidently considered him perfection. In his presence, Lady Ianthe was a different creature; her very beauty seemed to take a new character, tender, sweet, winsome. More than once Mrs. Rymer saw Lady Leeson looking anxiously at her daughter, but she was too diplomatic to interfere; the less attention drawn to them the better.

The gathering was a very brilliant one. Some of the most beautiful women and celebrated men in London were there, and as Mrs. Rymer looked on the magnificence around her, she could hardly help thinking all Lady Leeson had told her was a dream. The interest of the evening culminated for her when the rival lovers stood one on each side of Lady Ianthe's chair. It must have been a trying position for Lord Monford, although he was too proud to show it. He kept his post bravely, despite the evident disfavor of the lady; she gave all her smiles to Mr. Raymond, all her darker looks to him. Her voice, when she addressed Mr. Raymond, took the sound of a delicate silver bell; to Lord Monford, it was cold and abrupt. Silvia admired his bravery; he would not give in. He either did not or would not see her evident preference for his rival. Lady Leeson had watched the scene in something like agony for many minutes, then she crossed the room with an appearance of the most graceful nonchalance, and joined them.

Talk of tact, and of the tortures worldly women will bear with a smile; had her feet been standing on red hot plowshares, Lady Leeson would have made no sign. She spoke a few words to Lord Monford, to her daughter, then turned with the most suave and sparkling grace possible to Mr. Raymond. She talked to him of Leesdale, of his parents.

"It is quite refreshing," she said, "to see a well-known face in this crowd. Have you seen the earl? He has been inquiring for you."

Mr. Raymond regretted that he had not seen him and so fell into the snare so adroitly laid for him.

"Come with me," said her ladyship. "Lord Leeson positively wishes to see you, I know."

They walked away together; Mr. Raymond could not well refuse, but the look on his face was not a pleasant one. Lady Leeson took no notice of it; she talked gayly and cheerfully, though, if wishes would have slain him, he would not have lived long.

They went into the blue room, where Lord Leeson was talking to some eminent statesmen. Most probably the fact of his wife was no secret to him, for he immediately turned his attention to Mr. Raymond, leaving men of great note and standing, to devote himself to his daughter's lover.

"I have not seen you for some days," said the earl. "Is there any news from Leesdale?"

And he entered into such a long conversation with him that the young man saw no prospect of release. Lady Leeson returned to the drawing room alone, and a smile of most cheerful and serene content overspread her face when she saw Lord Monford still by her daughter's side.

But Mrs. Rymer had seen enough to make her task seem a formidable one. There could be no longer the least mistake about it; Lady Ianthe loved Mr. Raymond, while to Lord Monford she was supremely and superlatively indifferent.

"How she is to be changed I cannot tell," said Silvia to herself. "I should not like to be the one to thwart her or contradict her. It seems to me too late for interference. In my opinion, she does not now, and never will, care for any man living except Clifford Raymond."

Lady Leeson managed so well that, without seeming in the least to interfere, or without even seeming aware of what she was doing, she effectually prevented all further discourse between her daughter and her lover.

"I wonder," thought Mrs. Rymer, as she looked around on that glowing brilliant scene, "if all society is as hollow as this? Here we have jewels, luxury, magnificence—and underneath, bankruptcy, torture, and suspense."

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Nervous Irritability.—No part of the human machine requires more constant supervision than the nervous system—for upon it our health—and even life—depends. These Pills strengthen the nerves and are the safest general purifier of the blood. Nausea, headache, giddiness, numbness and mental apathy yield to them. They relieve in a summary manner those distressing dyspeptic symptoms, stomachic pains, fulness at the pit of the stomach, abdominal distension, and regulate alike capricious appetites and confined bowels—the commonly accompanying signs of defective or diminished nerve tone. Holloway's Pills are particularly recommended to persons of studious and sedentary habits, who gradually fall into a nervous and irritable state, unless some such restorative be occasionally taken.

It is an odd man who does not enjoy getting even.

Vigilant Care.

Vigilance is necessary against unexpected attacks of summer complaints. No remedy is so well-known or so successful in this class of diseases as Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Keep it in the house as a safe guard.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE waterworks hydrants appear to be in a defective state, notwithstanding Ald. Gillespie's report to the contrary.

TUESDAY was the hotest day experienced in Hamilton this summer. The thermometer registered 94 degrees in the shade at noon.

MR. BLAKE says he is "no more desirous" of leading the Grit party than he was some time ago. But he doesn't say how much he hankered for the job then.

COL. HEWITT, who organized the Royal Military College at Kingston, and was for eleven years commandant of that institution, has been appointed a Major-General on active service in the British army.

THE Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, has about 300 varieties of potatoes that are being experimented upon by Prof Saunders, and most interesting results are anticipated in that line.

GOV. HILL of New York, has received a petition for executive clemency in the case of Chapleau the murderer, confined in Clinton prison under a penalty of death. His execution is set down to occur during the week beginning July 21, and unless the Governor interferes he will be the first murderer to be executed by electricity.

THE true solution of the remarkable mortality among members of the Canadian parliament, fifteen members having died within the comparatively short period of three years, is no doubt found in the irregular hours kept at Ottawa, where the house sits until all the way from nine o'clock at night to two, three or four o'clock the next morning. Men accustomed to regular habits and early hours cannot stand the pressure and the long night sessions. It is reasonable to believe that the public business would not suffer and the members would be considerably benefitted if a more rational arrangement of business were made.

THE Arthur Enterprise man gives vent to his feelings on the great temperance question as follows:

There is grevious sorrow amongst those engaged in the retail liquor trade, the whiskey combine having raised the price of that beverage 20 cents per gallon. The retailers do not see their way clear to raising their price above the conventional 5 cents per glass, and how to overcome the difficulty is a stickler. As a rule the liquor has already been diluted and doctored as much as it will stand without detection. The best way out of the difficulty would be for them to agree to raise the price to 10 cents per glass, and sell straight goods. This would lead to the increased consumption of less harmful drinks, such as beer and ale. Let the whiskey go up and less of it will go down.

"NOW, see here," cried the free trader, prospring with the heat and the idea, "if protection is so good why don't you have protection in each province against all the others? If protection is good for Canada, why isn't it good for Ontario? And if it's good for Ontario, why isn't it good for Wentworth county? And if it's good for Wentworth county, why isn't it good for Barton township?"

"Well," returned the old farmer, "I build a house as protection for my family, but I don't build a separate house for each member of my family. On the other hand, I don't throw the doors wide open and let all the tramps in the country enjoy free trade in my dining room and crowd my own children out of their bed rooms. As the protection of my roof is for my family, so is the protection of the tariff for the family of provinces which make up the dominion of Canada."—Hamilton Spectator.

THE HAND OF DEATH.

With deep regret we record the death of Mr. James E. Duffy, the genial and obliging proprietor of the Elgin House, which occurred at two o'clock on Monday morning. For some time past Mr Duffy had not been enjoying the best of health, but had only been confined to his room for about two weeks. Just three days before the sad event occurred, he had sufficiently recovered to leave his bed, and Friday and Saturday was out on the street. On Saturday night, however, he had a relapse, and on Monday morning passed peacefully away. Drs Henry and Smith did everything in their power to save his life, but to no avail, death taking place at the time mentioned above.

The deceased was born in the township of York, and was forty four years old. Prior to his removal to Orangeville he was for eleven years one of the most popular conductors on the T. G. & B. R. Deceased had been in business in Orangeville for about fifteen years, and during that time made hosts to friends. He leaves a widow and three young daughters to mourn the loss of their protector.

The funeral of our departed friend took place on Tuesday afternoon; all the places of business were closed; many relatives and friends from a distance, and an unusually large number of citizens of this town, testified their respect for his memory, by following his remains to their last resting place in the Forest Lawn cemetery. Requiescat in pace.

THE GLORIOUS 12TH!

Loyally Celebrated in Orangeville.

NINETEEN LODGES PARTICIPATE IN THE FETE.

Big Crowds from all Over—The Town Handsomely Decorated in Evoctus, the Visitors—Sensible Speeches at the Grove.

The two hundredth anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was fittingly celebrated in this town by the Orangemen of this district. The town was decorated in the most gorgeous manner, and a flag floated from each flagstaff in town. In fact the decorations were better and more numerous than on Dominion day. From early morning crowds and lodges from the rural districts began to arrive, and they with the town lodges marched to the station to meet the northern brethren. After the trains pulled up at the station, the procession was reformed and was headed by the Orangeville and Shelburne bands. The procession marched up town and through the principal streets and then returned to the station to meet visitors from the south. Then a march to the maket square took place, when a few remarks were made by the leading men and the brethren dispersed for dinner.

AFTER DINNER

a grand procession, consisting of nineteen lodges, was formed and marched up to McCarthy and Wilcox's grove. A large platform had been erected from which Revs. Henderson, Watt, Gilmour Pierson, Mr. Hambley and others delivered very appropriate addresses, which were listened to attentively by the vast throng.

After spending a pleasant time in the grove the visitors returned down town and began to think of going home. Many of them left by the evening trains, but most of them living between here and Dundalk remained over for the special, which left at 11 P. M.

The following is a list of sixteen of the lodges, the names of the other three we were unable to procure:

L. O. L. No. 256, W. A. McCulla, W. M.; No. 566, James Courtney, W. M.; No 320, James McMaster, W. M.; No. 330, Wm Durkin, W. M.; No. 857, W. Potter, W. M.; No. 1099, James Still, W. M.; No 84, James Pearson, W.M.; No. 427, W Allen, W. M.; No. 22, J. B. Reid, W.M.; No. 635, J. White, W. M.; No. 125, Wm. Lee, W. M.; No 427, Jas Montgomery, W. M.; No. 185 A. Adams, W. M.; No. 192, W. J. Allen, W. M.; No. 250, W. L. Wilson, W.M.; No. 770, W. R. Nichol, W. M.

DRUM BEATS.

No accidents were reported.

The Citizens' bands of Orangeville and Shelburne discoursed appropriate music.

Marshal Bailey cut a fine figure with his plug and riding on a snow-white horse.

McMaster's lodge, No. 320, Prince of Wales road, had more members than any other during the day.

Chief Shields did all he could to prevent fast driving, but it would require three cops to do the work effectually.

Only one arrest was made, and drunken men were about as scarce as local news. The hotelkeepers, however, reaped a rich harvest.

TOO HEAVY LOADS.

To the Editor of THE SUN.

DEAR SIR—It surprises me very much that a town like Orangeville, with so many church going people, has not a branch of some humane society, or a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals. Not that a society of that kind would be an ornament to the town, but it would have plenty of work to do without searching very much.

It is a disgrace to humanity to allow some of the practices which have been indulged in of late to continue. For instance look at the immense loads of stone drawn by teams from the Nottawa quarries. There was a load weighed last week and it tipped the scales at 8800 lbs. Think of that for a team these sultry days! And it is not here alone where cruelty to horses exists. Many of the Orangeville drivers should be taught a lesson on the correct management of his faithful friend.

Hoping that some Christian friends may move in the matter, I remain

yours truly,

A LOVER OF JUSTICE.

Orangeville July 3rd 90.

GRAND VALLEY.

A lawn social was held at St. Albin's mission house here the other night.

The west Dufferin teachers' association held their first meeting here last week, and it was a decided success.

Rev Mr. Hill, the new pastor of the Methodist church here, delivered his introductory sermon on Sunday.

The C. P. R. station house at this village has been somewhat enlarged, much to the convenience of the travelling public.

On Tuesday of last week Mr. E. Hilborn got one of his fingers badly crushed while working among the machinery at the flour mill.

Blood poisoning necessitated the amputation of the forefinger of Wm. Tate's right hand. Dr. Groves, of Fergus, performed the operation.

The other day the little six year old son of Mr. Charles Woods accidentally broke one of his legs while playing with a number of companions. He is progressing as well as can be expected.

Local Intelligence.

Jack Irwin has resigned his position on the watering cart.

A circus of gipsies are camped on Mitchell's hill, near the C. P. R. station.

A large number of the Orangeville sports attended the races at Grand Valley on Tuesday.

INGLEHART'S.

Mrs. D. Smith has been summoned to appear at the police court this afternoon for selling liquor without a license.

The Lonsdowne lacrosse club of this town go to Fergus to-day to play a game with the junior club of that place.

A band of roving foreigners, accompanied by several bears, were soliciting alms throughout the town last week.

Bill Irwin will appear at the police court to day to answer to a charge of using profane language on the streets.

An unoccupied frame building near the R. C. church was reduced to ashes last Monday night. The fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary. No insurance.

Farmers should drive into hotel alleyways very slowly to avoid accidents. Last Friday afternoon a little girl was almost under the horses' feet at the Dufferin and Commercial hotels archway.

Mrs. Hollinger, the lady who was mentioned in last week's SUN as having been badly injured at the C. P. R. station, is recovering from the effects of the accident. It is said she intends to sue the company for damages.

SAVE THE CENTS, AND THE DOLLARS WILL SAVE THEMSELVES.—The best way to follow this excellent advice is to commence securing some of our marked down Dress Goods, Dry Goods, Parasols, Tweeds, & etc.

ENDACOTT BROS.

John Hollinger, employed at the Nottawa quarries, had his foot badly crushed by an immense stone falling on it last Thursday. It was this man's wife who was almost killed in the railway accident a week ago Saturday.

A rumor has been in circulation around here to the effect that Mr. Paul Gallaugher, of Toronto, formerly of Perm, was dead. We received intelligence from his wife this morning saying such is not the case. Mr G. is laid up at present, but will be around again in a few days.

The following personal appeared in last week's Arthur Enterprise: Our wife has gone home to her mamma. This is not a final or judical separation, but merely a temporary affair. We are batching it, with only a cat and a canary for company, and the pile of unwashed dishes and kettles is growing space.

CAPTURED BY LITTLE PRICES.—Our immense New Stock is going. Little prices takes the Elephant off our hands. Wonderful bargains in Spring and Summer Dry Goods—for balance of the season.

ENDACOTT BROS.

HINTS ON HOW TO KEEP COOL.—Wear wool next the skin. Eat but little meat and no highly spiced or seasoned dishes. Milk is preferable to tea or coffee. Do not overwork. Many an overtaxed brain or nervous system at last succumbs to the effect of overwork in summer. Use no stimulants.

SETTLING UP AFFAIRS.—Messrs. William and John Duffy, brothers of the late J. E. Duffy, are in town settling up the affairs in connection with their late brother's estate. The deceased gentleman was insured in the Manufacturers' Life for $2000, and leaves a bank account of about $8000 besides.

CHEAP TRIP.—Another of Van Every's cheap excursion trips to New York and return will leave Toronto on Saturday, July 26. Any body who have gone on Van's trip once will go again, and anybody who have not should "take in" this one. Just imagine! you can leave Toronto on Saturday and go to New York and back again all for $11. Embrace the opportunity!

BOGUS QUARTERS.—Look out for bogus quarters. The city of Toronto has been flooded with them lately and no doubt many of them will find their way into the country. They may be detected by the ring, and also on account of the edge not being perfectly milled. They are no earthly use to anyone, and parties attempting to pass them are liable to be placed under arrest. Do not take them.

OPENING OUT IN ORANGEVILLE.—We are pleased to see that Mr. J. M. Bennett has been appointed agent for the London and Lancashire Life Assurance Company. This old company, according to the government blue book, did the largest life insurance business in Canada last year of any other English company. Their plans are very highly thought of wherever the London and Lancashire is represented. Mr. Bennett, we understand, is running in a large number of applications.

GARDEN PARTY.—The ladies of St. Mark's church intend holding a garden party on the grounds at Mr. R. T. Haun's residence on Tuesday evening next. Ice cream, strawberries and cream, lemonade etc., will be sold on the grounds. The Citizen's band will enliven the proceedings by rendering some choice music, and the grounds will be illuminated by electricity. The proceeds will be devoted to rebuilding the spire of the church which was destroyed by lightning three years ago.

"GRANDY" MCKINNEY DEAD.—On Thursday last another of the early settlers passed away in the person of Jane McKinney, relict of the late James McKinney, at the advanced age of ninety years and five months. The old lady settled in Mono about thirty five years ago, and continued to reside in Mono township until her death. For the past several years she has resided with her son, who is executor of the Forest Lawn cemetery. The remains were interred in the Forest Lawn on Friday.

WHY HE DIDN'T.—"Why don't you run a paper like that?" said a merchant to a publisher throwing down a blanket sheet city daily. "Why don't you run a store like that?" said the publisher of the country sheet as he turned the paper and pointed to a full page advertisement that brought the city publisher $250 an issue. Just then the country publisher presented a monthly bill for $5, and the merchant began to talk of economizing by cutting down his advertisement and stopping his paper. He did both, and the sheriff is doing his advertising for him.

HE GOT OUT.—On the 12th of July Chief Shields arrested John Richmond for being drunk and disorderly and lodged him in the lockup. Richmond, however, disliked the idea of spending that pious, glorious and immortal day behind prison bars, so he looked in vain for some way out of the place. Not finding any way of exit, he contented himself by starting to work and making one. He kicked away at the brick wall until he made a hole large enough to admit his body, then he was a free man and coolly walked away. He will appear at the police court to morrow.

THE PIGS MUST GO!—The members of the board of health and the special committee appointed at the last meeting of the council met on Monday evening to arrange matters regarding the pig nuisance. The board of health people claim that they cannot get certain parts of the town in a healthful state owing to the close proximity of pigs; and if the council wouldn't back them up in the discharge of their duty they intended to resign. An understanding was finally arrived at between the committee and the board. The terms are that the pigs cannot be kept in the settled parts of the town between the 1st day of May and the 1st day of November.

ANOTHER FRAUD.—The Uxbridge papers report a new scheme by which a farmer in Uxbridge township was defrauded. An agent came along representing the Pinless Wire Clothes Line Company and induced the farmer to act as agent for the sale of it. They delivered 3,000 lbs. of the wire, took a so called receipt, which turned out to be a note, and now the farmer has to pay the note though he cannot sell the wire. Such swindles as these have been often exposed by the press, and it seems strange that any one can now be deceived by them. People should be careful in dealing with strangers, and especially in signing any paper. Look carefully at any paper presented for signature by a stranger and then when satisfied with it, put it in the fire.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL.—Fawcett Bennett, the young man who is accused of stealing a gold watch and chain from J. F. Ewings, appeared before Police Magistrate Pattullo and Justice of the Peace Mackinnon at the police court on Saturday afternoon. Crown Attorney MacMillan prosecuted and Mayor Walsh defended Bennett. Mr. Ewings was the first witness. He said he lost a watch on the 1st of July, but could not remember where he lost it. The watch was produced, but witness could not swear positively that it was his. Jeweller Fox recognized the timepiece, and remembered having sold it to Ewings in 1887. Chief Shields explained his connection with the case. He told how the watch had been found in the pawn-shop at Hamilton and the subsequent arrest of Bennett. The magistrates thought the evidence was strong enough to warrent a conviction, and they, therefore, sent him up for trial, accepting bail in the meantime. He will likely come before the county judge in September.

A POINTER.—During a recent thunder storm, a lady not a thousand miles from Dundalk took the precaution to remove that useful and highly-ornamental appendage, familiarly known as the "Bustle," for fear that the springs of its internal machinery should attract the lightning and the results be very serious. We have an excellent recipe for such cases, which we give "free gratis, for nothing," out of pure disinterested regard for the safety of the dear creatures. It is well-known that feathers and glass are non-conductors of the electric fluid. Well, take a feather bed and wrap the "B" carefully in it, then enclose the whole bundle in a glass case. It may then be replaced in position and worn with perfect safety, for even the lightning will keep shy of it. This may be relied on as a safeguard.—Dundalk Herald. There's no need of doing all that, Bro. Hall; suppose the ladies of Dundalk take a pointer from the fair sex of this town and keep in sight of the latest fashions. Why! the bustle was discarded by the Orangeville ladies a year ago.

The evils resulting from habitual costiveness are many and serious; but the use of harsh, drastic purgatives is quite as dangerous. In Ayer's Pills, however, the patient has a mild but effective aperient, superior to all others, especially for family use.

Now is the time you need sugar and you can buy the best and cheapest at

HIGH UP IN THE AIR!

Prof. Bready Takes a Two Mile Drop From a Balloon.

THE PARACHUTE DIDN'T WORK TO PERFECTION, AND THE BALLOONIST IS SLIGHTLY INJURED.

The Remainder of the Dominion Day Program Carried Out on the Evening of the Twelfth.

If the weather that graced the Glorious Twelfth had been manufactured to order it could not have suited the Citizens' Dominion day celebration committee any better than Saturday. It will be remembered that the rain on Dominion day knocked the celebration endways to a certain extent, and, consequently, the evening program had to be postponed until the 12th.

The principal attractions were the balloon ascension and the fireworks. The former was the drawing card, and those who witnessed it were well repaid. Shortly after seven o'clock Prof. Bready, of Cleveland, Ohio, secured himself in his parachute and the balloon shot up in the air. Up, up it went until the professor seemed a mere speck. At the height of twelve thousand feet he cut himself loose from the balloon, and the parachute gently spread itself out. When about half way down, however, the and all the professor would do could not stop it. At this juncture the nervy aeronaut lost this strength, and the swinging still continued. Fortunately he alighted on a very favorable piece of ground about three quarters of a mile from where he made the ascent. When the attendant arrived on the scene Prof. Bready was unconscious. He was removed to the Gordon house and medical attendance was summoned. The doctors examined the injured man and found a small bone broken in his right leg. Besides this, his head was cut and his body considerably bruised. He remained at the hotel until to-day, when he left for Cleveland.

THE FIREWORKS

display was better than that of former years, and everyone left the grounds well pleased with the evening's program.

SUNBEAMS.

Joe Kelly's clerks dished up lemonade and pop to the thirsty throng.

The Shelburne band boys were on the grounds, but they had left their instruments up town.

Our own Citizens' band furnished music during the evening.

The gate receipts amounted to $256.

"Mont" Wallace, of Jamestown, N. Y. won the bicycle race, and was presented with a valuable silver medal.

The usual number of small souled people stood outside the fence and tried to see everything that was going on, notwithstanding the small admission fee charged.

The grounds were well illuminated by electricity.

St. Clair Tunnel is progressing favorably, and this summer will probably witness the completion of one of the most gigantic international enterprises ever undertaken on this continent. Its magnitude may be judged from the fact that the entire length of the tunnel, extending from portal to portal under the bed of the St. Clair river, will be 6,000 feet. Of that distance 2,162 feet has been finished on the Canadian side and 2,653 feet on the American side, leaving 1,191 yet to be completed.

WANT SIR ADOLPHE HIRED.

OTTAWA, July 16.—It has leaked out that a circular letter has been issued from Toronto to several prominent militia officers throughout the Dominion, asking signatures to a petition addressed to Sir John Macdonald, complaining of the mal administration of the department under Sir Adolphe Caron's care, and praying that he be removed from his position. The petition states the interests of the militia are totally neglected; that the Minister will neither do the work himself nor let his officials do do it. Letters lying in masses on the tables, which have been unattended to for eighteen months. Apathy and disgust are spreading from officers to the men, and very soon the Canadian Militia will begin to tumble to pieces. All that keeps it from doing so now is the natural military spirit of the country, which appears unquenchable.

KNOW NOTHING OF IT.

Police magistrate Denison' lieutenant colonel commanding the Governor General's Body Guards, and one of the senior officers of the Toronto garrison, was shown the above despatch. "I don't know the first thing about this," he said, "but I do know that Sir Adolphe Caron is the best Minister of Militia the volunteers of this country ever had. I have been through two campaigns, and am in a position to judge. The care that he took of the volunteers in the rebellion of 1885 was splendid. Owing chiefly to the services of Sir Adolphe Caron we were well fed and clothed all through the champaign. There was no parsimony or meanness displayed in supplying the troops with clothing and provisions. After our terrible experience at the front in 1866, when the soldiers engaged in repelling the Fenian raid almost perished from starvation, I was prepared to see my men die from absolute privation and want. But Sir Adolphe Caron took such precautions for our safety and care that we had everything we wanted. I for one will never forget his kindness and I don't think any soldier who took part in that expedition could be loyal to himself, if he would sign such a petition. At Fort Erie we were actually left to starve, so bad was the commissariat. We would have starved in the midst of that rich country if our telegraph appeals for succour had not been quickly answered and supplies forwarded."

Other prominent officers spoken to, also denied any knowledge of the affair.

GENTLEMEN,—Your Committee on Roads and Bridges beg leave to report as follows: On inspecting the bridges on the 8th and 9th lines, Lot No. 3, over Philip's Creek, we found them entirely destroyed by the rainstorm of the 5th June; likewise the bridge on the townline, Amaranth and Mono, Lot 1. We notified the Reeve of Mono of the destruction of the latter, and we advertised and let the contract by auction for building a new one. Messrs. The contracts were let on the 20th June to Richard Boyle for the sum of $244, his tender being lowest—the bridges to be built similar to that built by Wm. Boyle at 10 side line Con 8, last year, and to be completed on or before the 21st day of July next. We also advertised, and let to the lowest bidder, two small bridges on Lots 6 and 10, which, with approaches, amounted to $47. We also let two contracts on the townline, Amaranth and East Garafraxa, to repair washouts, but cannot tell the exact cost until the same is gravelled; each township to pay half cost. All of which is respectfully submitted.

A GREAT NEWSPAPER RUN IN A PECULIAR MANNER.

A. S. Bennett and His "Sensation" in the Herald Office.

For more than half a century, says Maurice M. Minton in the Illustrated American, the name James Gordon Bennett has been at home and abroad a synonym for journalistic enterprise, and from the day that a certain sagacious Scot of that name edited and printed a small paper called the New York Herald the words Bennett and Herald have been blended together, one and indivisible.

Then Barnum's "a mare jolly, wholesome youngster," the writer states upon excellent authority, never existed. With alacrity he mastered the details of his work and attended to it with all the steadfastness of a bright young man who felt he would finally inherit the business, and who could not wholly overcome the natural longing for out-door sports on sunny days. By nature generous, warm-hearted, impulsive, quick to give and take offense, placed by an indulgent father in possession of funds ample for every amusement, however costly, the "young man" flourished about town. He soon became distinguished as an excellent yachtsman, pigeon-shot and sportsman.

Up to this time he was merely "young Jim Bennett," an heir-apparent to the Ann street throne. Upon his accession he became James Gordon Bennett. The energy he had displayed in shooting, sailing, racing, and other manly outdoor sports he imparted to the Herald, and the old simpleton at once recognized that the young man who had converted the top floor of the Herald into a gymnasium was master and intended to reign absolutely as master. After a few years Mr. Bennett, who always believed in the homely adage that "all work and no play makes Jack a dull boy," decided that what was true for Jack was equally true for Jim, and made plans accordingly for a life of leisure and pleasure. Paris was and is his favorite place of residence, and in that fair city he was earning the long time of Herald management, all on which, his Banquo's line, stretches out to the crack of doom.

J. G. BENNETT.

Somewhat is known of Mr. Bennett's achievements as a gallant sportsman that colonial society said, if all of his management of the Herald that is known is said, inaccurate by analogy. His attack on it was like a sudden violent fever—spasmodic, but with brief intermissions. When he contemplates a journey he moves it as a piece of [illegible]. Immediately upon his return to Madrid [illegible] and Gold [illegible] Lewis stories to Africa, [illegible] reputation [illegible] Herald, and sent [illegible] expeditions to the north pole. [illegible] scarcely [illegible] honorable entitlements [illegible] among the governors of the day. The interest in him, however, is in the government of his employees. [illegible] weather in a [illegible] Herald [illegible] because, for they are [illegible] week—that is they are paid by the week. But the week sometimes extended by [illegible]. But [illegible] Bennett [illegible] required. Cost us one taught Herald men that slow execution is not a "criminal punishment."

The Herald office offends the young, hopeful and ambitious a wonderful floor. It is an excellent school, and from it have graduated the first journalists in the country. It is an honor of a rail fence if to young men a three months' selling man can will be assigned to them at the personal "disposal of Mr. Bennett." [illegible] he has been at the leader writers [illegible] Mr. Bennett: [illegible] great [illegible] in the Herald [illegible] New York [illegible] these are [illegible] young men at [illegible] and made [illegible] "[illegible]" [illegible] up more frequently the managing editor, or the functionary who is senior other official position [illegible] Mr. Bennett [illegible] at the Cap. An approximate [illegible] Neither the turnip, nor the attempt [illegible] managing [illegible] functions [illegible] Mr. Bennett [illegible] appoints them to positions [illegible] are filled. [illegible] assured that the Herald [illegible] and goes off for a trip on the swift-sailing Navarrin. The [illegible] feel that promotion [illegible] to be [illegible] the Herald office [illegible] forward. How many the dignity of the [illegible] the Herald office [illegible] can be [illegible] to be as speedy [illegible] Paris.

If Mr. Bennett decides to be in Paris and [illegible] mail, he has his right hand man [illegible] right hand man [illegible] to the managing editor who have been a series of changes [illegible] into high positions. Mr. Bennett is a man of firm and long [illegible]. In fond moments of self-deception he believes he possesses the [illegible] of a certain detective agency, and [illegible] nothing can take place in the offices of the New York Herald and Telegram, or London Herald and Paris Herald, without the secret service before all is [illegible] to spreading it out before him. This system is a direct outgrowth of his early training. That human flesh succumbed easily to temptation and bore watching. The secret service is recruited from those who once held high positions and were electrocuted. In compensation for their inability to earn a living and yielding to their servile supplications, Mr. Bennett employs them to do his dirty work. The singular fact remains that while Mr. Bennett will employ faithful, enthusiastic, able men to conduct the various departments of his great journal, he will not spine to watch them—men who are failures themselves and green with envy. These men he prefers to believe. An adverse report by the secret service never results in an investigation. Mr Bennett is a Cæsar to whom there is no appeal. "To ask an explanation of me," cables Mr Bennett, "is unprecedented in the annals of the Herald." Mr. Bennett decides as his humor, his whim, or his convenience dictates. He finds that distance does not lend enchantment to the view, and when he discovers that a contemporary has stolen a march upon him he touches the magic cable button and orders a transformation scene. A Herald man should live by the day and keep his valise on grips in a grip-sack, for he, like Poor Jo, is kept "movin' on"—it may be to London, Paris, or out of the front door. Lord Alfred's brook and Mr. Bennett chant the same refrain:

"For men may come,
And men may go,
But I go on forever."

Mr Bennett in his office in New York is the best chief a truly wide-awake newspaper man could desire. Quick as a flash to take an idea and act upon it; strong, defiant and determined, he fires his men with enthusiasm. He takes up an idea and accomplishes it with a brilliant dash which electrifies his followers. Prompt to reward merit and ready to overlook folly, he inspires his entire staff and every man in his establishment, but when 3,000 miles of sea are between himself and his men he is the very worst master that ever was known. In his friendships he has always been strong, generous and faithful, but unworthy suspicion of all men has severed many a close tie. In appearance he is one of the most distingue men ever seen in club, cafe, or boulevard; in society he is a brilliant conversationist; in his business relations he is an autocrat; in the newspaper world he is a peer to the foremost, and in the world of all round sports he has no rival. Indeed, he who exclaims: "What a character Bennett would be for a novel!" ex Lord with a right to attention. A suggestion, merely—why not call it "James II; The True Story of a Czar of Journalism?"

HE WAS ALL RIGHT.

How a Drummer Identified Himself Among Strange Brothers.

Perhaps Masons will appreciate the following experience of a drummer identifying himself as a genuine commercial traveler of Grand Rapids, Mich., as told by the Times of that city.

"Whence cometh thou, pard?"

"From the lodge of the Holy St. John, Mich."

"What seek ye here to do?"

"To take a few orders and collect a bill of Bilious."

"Then you are a drummer?"

"I am so taken and accepted by the boys."

"How may I know you to be a drummer?"

"By my cheek and my 50-lb sample-case; try me."

"How will you be tried?"

"By the square."

"Why by the square?"

"Because the square is a magistrate and an emblem of stupidity."

"Where were you first led to be a drummer?"

"In my mind."

"Where next?"

"In a printing office adjoining a regular post of drummers."

"How were you prepared?"

"By being divested of my last cent; my cheek rubbed down with a brick; a bunion plaster over both my eyes; and a heavy sample-case in each hand. In this fix I was conducted to the door of the post."

"How did you know it was a door, being blind?"

"By first stepping into a coal scuttle and afterwards by bumping my head against the door-knob."

"How gained you admission?"

"By benefit of my cheek."

"Had you the required cheek?"

"I had it not, but Steve Sears had it for me."

"How were you received?"

"On the sharp toe of a boot applied to my natural trousers."

"What did this teach you?"

"Not to fool around too much."

"What happened next?"

"I was set down on a cake of ice and was asked if I put my trust in merchantile reports."

"Your answer?"

"Not if I know myself I don't!"

"How were you next handled?"

"I was straddle of a goat made out of a 2x4x4 and trotted around the room nine times by four worthy brothers, and then trotted in front of the left Bower for further instructions."

"How did he instruct you?"

"To approach a customer in three upright regular steps, with my business card extended at right angles and my arms forming a perfect square."

"How were you then disposed of?"

"I was again seated on the cake of ice in front of the drygoods box and made take the following horrible and binding oath: I, Charles S. Robinson, do hereon and hereinmost coercreastingly and desolcolally swear by the great Paul Flush that I will never and always steal all the trade secrets I can for the use and benefit of this most august Order. And I further swore by the Bald-Headed Jack of Clubs, that I will never give, carve, make, sold, take or cut prices below the regular rates. And I further swore by the Piper that played before Moses to never have any commercial dealings with any man unless he is sound on the Goose. I was then asked what I most needed."

"What was your reply?"

"Money."

"What did you then behold?"

"A copy of Dunn & Co's reports open at chapter Muskegon. Upon the open leaf rested a pair of oiling scales in one pan of which reposed ten ounces of corn cultivated by sand in the other sat a small silver jackass."

* * * * *

"Shake! Brother, will you be off of me?"

"Both, if I can borrow enough money to get out of town on."

"Have you any cigars?"

"I have."

"Give 'em to me."

"I did not so receive 'em; neither do I so impart 'em."

"How will you dispose of 'em?"

"On sixty days' time or two per cent cash F O B."

"All right, begin."

"No, you begin."

"I gives 'em set."

"Set 'em up."

"The words and signs are all right, Bro Snookums. He is a yard wide and all wool and you can bet on him. Bro Crookson and I each bit the chap $5 and he left his many thanks and kind wishes."

THE DEMON DRINK

Causes the Downfall of a Former Canadian Clergyman.

LINCOLN, Ill., July 12.—A sensation was created here yesterday when it became known that Rev. Oliver J. Booth, Rector of Trinity Church, one of the wealthiest and largest congregations of this section, had been removed by friends to a hospital in Chicago to recover from the effects of liquor. The clergyman went to Chicago recently to effect a reconciliation with his wife who had refused to live with him. His mission was futile, and he returned to this city in a nervous and unstrung condition. Morose and melancholy over the loss of his wife's love, the unfortunate rector began to drown his sorrow in deep potations. Close to his lodging house was a saloon to which he paid frequent visits every day. He bought liquor by the quart and consumed it in the solitude of his room. When the facts became known the bishop of the Diocese demanded Mr. Booth's resignation. The rector refused to resign, and only when served with papers making him defendant in a divorce suit brought in Cook County, by his wife, did he obey his superior. Mr. Booth is a native of St. Catharines, Canada.

"WHAT MEDICINES ARE MOST CALLED FOR?"

asked the reporter of an old druggist.

"Dr. Pierce's preparations," he replied. "They are sold under a positive guarantee that they will, in every case, give satisfaction, or the money is promptly refunded. His 'Favorite Prescription,' for all those chronic weaknesses, nervous and other derangements peculiar to women, is used with unfailing success. It cures weak back, bearing-down sensations, irregularities and weakness common to the sex, and being the most perfect of tonic medicines builds up and strengthens the entire system. The demand for it is constant, and I am conversant with scores of cases cured by it."

Returning after a few moments' absence, the venerable wielder of the pestle remarked, "the number of sarsaparillas and other, so-called, 'blood medicines' is legion; but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery outsells them all and it is the only blood-purifier out of the many which I am obliged to keep upon my shelves, that is guaranteed to benefit or cure in all cases for which it is recommended, or money paid for it is refunded."

"In the line of Pills," remarked the old gentleman, "the little Sugar-coated 'Pellets' put up by Dr. Pierce lead all others, both in amount of sales and the general satisfaction they give my customers."

Poetry.

TIDE IS IN.

The boats lay stranded on the beach,
Tangled with seaweed, dark and green;
A desolate and dreary scene,
For as the eye could reach;
The tide was out.

How changed the view when day is done;
The boats rode gayly on the deep,
Their white sails nodding as in sleep,
Kissed by the setting sun;
The tide was in.

Thus many a life, in want or woe,
Lies stranded on the barren shore;
But God is God for evermore;
Take courage, for we know
The tide is coming in.

And lifted from the rocks and shoals
We sail upon a sunlit sea;
Night passes on eternity—
Sweet rest for weary souls—
The tide is in

A QUARREL.

There's a knowing little proverb,
From the sunny land of Spain;
But in Northland, as in Southland,
Is its meaning clear and plain.
Lock it up within your heart;
Neither lose nor lend it—
Two it takes to make a quarrel;
One can always end it.

Try it well in every way,
Still you'll find it true,
In a fight without a foe,
Pray what could you do?
If the wrath is yours alone,
Soon you will expend it—
Two it takes to make a quarrel
One can always end it.

Let's suppose that both are wroth,
And the strife begun,
If one voice shall cry for "Peace,"
Soon it will be done.
If but one shall span the breach,
He will quickly mend it—
Two it takes to make a quarrel;
One can always end it.

SUNBEAMS.

"Oh, you darling old papa!" "Yes—dress or bonnet?"

Had no Need of Art.—Bessie—"Did you two make up?" Charlie—"No. Only Jenny did."

"She threw me a kiss, but I didn't get it." "Why not?" "She didn't throw it straight."

Lady (searching for burglars)—Here, Bridget, you let down the folding bed, and then I'll look under it.

"I'm not in it," was the proud remark of the lemon, with a scornful glance at the circus lemonade.

Mrs. Hojack—John, dear, the doctor says you'll have to live on oatmeal for a week. Hojack (despairingly)—Oh! this is gruel.

Clara (to her father)—Henry wanted me to ask you if you would help him out of his debts? Father—I'll give him a lift.

Never cry over spilled milk, dearest. Penelope—But if the milk happens to be condensed and you get a cold slab or two on your new skirt.

"Parting is such sweet sorrow!" she quoted. The young man blushed nervously. "You're right," he replied, "I'll go to the barbers' next time!"

He (languidly)—Let's have a flirtation, just for amusement. She (drearily)—Let's wait a month. There's nobody here yet to talk about it.

Again the Facetious Jeweller.—Sign writer—"I can supply you with any kind of signs you want." Jeweller—"All right. Paint me a few signs of a rushing fall trade."

She—Who is that distinguished looking man across the way—the one in the tight suit? He—He is a butcher, of course. Don't you notice his mutton chop whiskers?

Robinson—What a terrible thing it is to be poor.

Travers—Not half so bad as not having any credit.

Thousands have been relieved of indigestion and loss of appetite by a single bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. The use of this medicine, by giving tone and strength to the assimilative organs, has made innumerable cures of chronic dyspepsia. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle.

Jones' Revenge—Muggins—"Funniest thing happened the other day. Jones was trying to make his mule drink out of a bucket, when the animal kicked him." Cobb—"Ah, then, did Jones kick the mule?" Muggins—"No, he kicked the bucket."

"Allow me to lay this little gift at your feet." "No, no, I never take any presents from my gentleman friends." "But this is only a copy of my poems!" "Oh, in that case I don't mind. I thought it was something of value."

The New Help.—"Here! you! thin gummi! What's your name? What under the sun are you doing with the lawn-mower?" "Lawn-mower, is it? Sure, an' o'im thryin' to use the schwaper, mum, as ye tould me. It's none to easy wid de earpit, mum; but it's faithful job wid de trimmin's on de loog."

Mrs. Alva Young,
of Waterford, Ont., writes, "My baby was very sick with summer complaint, and nothing would help him till I tried Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which cured him at once. It is one of the best remedies I ever used.

'Twas Ever Thus.—Minimus (the new boy of an inquiring turn of mind, to employer)—"Why, Mr. Maximus, did that young man who just went out blush and stammer so while looking over that tray of rings?" Maximus—"What did he buy?" Minimus—"An engagement ring." Maximus—"That's why he blushed and stammered so."

Indianapolis, July 7.—The oftanest divorced woman lives in this city. She has been divorced eight times, twice from the same man, and is now living with her ninth husband. She is 37 years old, and comes of a family noted for its divorces. Her mother has had six divorces and is living with her seventh husband. An uncle and two aunts have each been married five times. They are still young.

THE HONORABLE JOHN.

IS WHAT THE NEIGHBORS CALL THE MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.

It is a Title of Respect—Thirty-Three Years in Public Life—Not a Professional Politician but of Stalwart Public and Private Mould.

Of those who were in the old parliament of Canada when the Hon. John Carling first entered it but four are members of the Dominion parliament today, namely, Sir John Macdonald, Sir Hector L. Langevin, Mr. Blanchard Jerrold and Mr. Dawson. Sir John was then a member for Kingston, in 1857 he was returned for Lennox, in 1861 he sat for Victoria. During that considerable period of a century he has represented the community in which he had his home with but one break. That break occurred in 1874 when Mr. Carling was defeated by corruption on the grand scale. I has passed into a proverb. His opponent, Major Walker, was unseated and disqualified, and Mr. Carling did not care to go to the polls again and stepped out of public life for four years. In 1878 he was once again offered him of to his old constituents and returned his relations to them as member. It is difficult to find in the political annals of Canada, such cool nerve on the part of constituents as the relations between London and her representative have exemplified during that long period of years. A few such could be instanced among the politicians of other parts of Canada, but it is doubtful if any similar case of long continued and unwavering confidence can be found among the annals of the changeful and fickle electorate of the geographical west. During that time the country has been agitated by all sorts of questions, but nothing seems to have changed the idea of the majority of his neighbors that they had in "Honest John" as they loved to call him, a representative after their own hearts.

But not content with sending him to the Federal parliament, when in 1867 Ontario got a little parliament of her own, they sent him there too, and in the first government of Ontario led by John Sandfield Macdonald, the member for London held the portfolio of commissioner of agriculture and public works.

There were evils in the system of dual representation and it was abolished in 1872. Mr. Carling determined to retain his seat in the commons and with the exception of the interregnum I have already mentioned he has remained a member of that house ever since. This completes the history of his political relations with those who are at once his neighbours and his constituents, and it is a narrative that is honorable to him and them. He had every right to command their esteem. He was born in London town ship county, of Middlesex, in the year 1829. His father, a Yorkshireman, was one of the earliest settlers in the county. When John was washing in long, slow, plodding years of age, the family moved into the growing town of London of the Thames, named after the greatest city of all the age. Here the father engaged in the growing business, while young John went to work in the old city. In 1849 John and his elder brother William succeeded to the prosperous business established by the father. The same year saw him begin to take an interest in public affairs, for we find him acting as school trustee and in 1854 he was elected to the City Council, and acted as a civic legislator for four years. During the last year of his alderman hip, namely in 1857 he became a candidate for parliament and was elected for the first time.

I have already recorded that he held a portfolio in the first Ontario provincial cabinet. The posts he has held in the Dominion Cabinet have been important. In 1882 he was taken into the cabinet as receiver general, and held the office till the defeat of the Macdonald-Cartier government. In 1885 he again became one of Sir John Macdonald's colleagues, being made postmaster general which he held until 1887. In that year he assumed the portfolio of Agriculture, a department which he still continues to administer. It may truly be described as a multifarious branch of government. It will be acknowledged that this is a fact if the reader will peruse a list of some of the matters that come under the purview of the minister of agriculture. The subjects of his administration include, arts, agriculture, cattle exports, immigration, quarantine, mortuary statistics, general statistics, the census, patents, copyright, trade-marks, &c., and lately the bureau of labour statistics has been added. Heterogeneous as are the concerns of this branch of the public service, the section which brings out Mr. Carlings enthusiasm is that of agriculture. It must be remembered that he was born on a farm and that he has never ceased to have not alone an interest, but a material interest in farming. At least up to some years ago he tilled the homestead, whether he does so yet I am not in a position to say. However the art of the husbandman has always had a charm for him and one of the earliest of his administrative acts when commissioner of agriculture of Ontario, was to establish the Ontario Experimental Farm, an institution that has done a great deal of good to the farming community of Ontario, and which is probably destined to do even more good in the future. He did not remain long enough in the Ontario House, however, to realise the dream and the carrying out of the design was the work of other hands. It can well be believed therefore that when he was made minister of agriculture in the Dominion cabinet one of his first thoughts would be to return to the darling project whose birth he had seen but whose youth and growth to full fruition he had not been enabled to guide. It will be seen he did not lose much time. He became minister of agriculture in 1885 and in 1887 he induced his colleagues and parliament to authorize the establishment of a Dominion system of experimental farms. Under this mandate a central farm was established just outside of Ottawa, on the borders of Ontario and Quebec. Branches were placed at Nappan, Nova Scotia; Brandon, Manitoba; Indian Head, North-west territories; and Agassiz, British Columbia.

Just in passing, it may be said that quite a number of people mistake the aim of these farms. I have met several intelligent persons who appeared to think the farms were established to show how farming may be made very profitable. Obviously, of course, that is the aim, but the farms are not designed as objects lessons in high farming, but experimental. The results of them are carefully compiled and thoroughly distributed in the form of bulletins, which are obtainable free of charge on application. I have personally visited the Experimental Farm at Ottawa, and have spoken with the Director, but I learn that a very minority of so far have matters been considered on the Central Farm. I should like to say a word of tribute to the officials of Mr. Carling's department. I have met officials in other departments, and have met officials in other departments, but I have never met officials more courteous than those of Mr. Carling's department. If he is a man of humble Parliament, he is where the brethren, living in rural parts, come from early morn till dusky eve to make lodgings which seem very humble disposed grub which they had never before.

This is the moment of the achievements of the minister of agriculture, and it seems only to be the climax of his career.

In person the Minister of Agriculture is tall, fair in the head and front of the Dominion. He is over six feet in height, straight as an arrow and finely proportioned. His features are somewhat hard, that is an index to his admirable disposition. His affability has of course his advantages as well as its disadvantages. It makes him at times the mark for the "barbs" of the opposition, but he proves time after time gentlemanly opposition the good-nature, and unassuming demeanour.

He is a ready speaker in any sense of the word. Parliament he does not trouble at all, but on his favorite topic of husbandry he is well informed and can, where it is expected of him give hot solid, facts and figures. His fellow-members appreciate him for his approachableness, his colleagues for his geniality and total absence of pretension, while he brings to their Council table not great brilliancy of mental vision or astonishing eloquence but a sound judgment and a stainless public and private life that made him best known where he is best known, namely among his neighbors, as "the Honorable John."

CATARRH,
CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER
A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 303 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

Read this extract from the scientific papers of Great Britain and Europe:
The four greatest medical societies of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practise here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25.to $100 to consult the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle.

A DANGER SIGNAL!
A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that, if neglected, that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not let an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the dropping into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

NASAL BALM
INSTANTLY RELIEVES
Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cent for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

FULFORD & Co. Brockville, Ont.

T. D. D. Loyd, 6 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the wonderful healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief. Hearing of your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the other medicines put together, that I have persevered myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shall lose no time in recommending it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM
POSITIVELY CURES
CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my own case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co., Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm cures me, the most perfect satisfaction; I say medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I find it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite as rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After trying several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

"Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyson, (of Fortsadina, Tex.) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. R. Willey, 148 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my trouble. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. ### LOVE AND DEATH.

'Tis life whirl, a dizzy whirl,
And men and women come and go;
'Twas thus when I was but a girl—
How years have sent their flakes of snow
Upon the locks that first grew brown;
And still I see about the town
The eager faces, and the street
Is thronging still with busy feet.

I hear the sound, I hear the rush,
The trampling, trampling, o'er and o'er;
But in my heart there is a hush,
A pain for steps that come no more;
I listen still to catch their ring,
My own glad foot prepared to spring,
To greet, as they approach the door,
The blessed steps that come no more.

But men and boys go in and out,
And merrily the world goes on;
I listen midst the rout
To catch the voices that are gone;
I go about the household cares,
See how the dog or kitten fares,
I sweep the rug or make the bed,
Still thinking—thinking of the dead.

And they? Do they, amid the host,
That throng along the golden street,
A moment pause—in memory lost—
And listen to our coming feet?
While angels all around rejoice,
Remember they our earthly voice?
O, can those pearly gates above
Shut out from them our yearning love?

Or do they sometimes sit apart,
And ponder on the precious past?
Remember they, with loving heart,
That trembling kiss—it was the last?
They cannot sure forget its thrill,
Its presence lingers round them still,
For 'twas a soul—'twas not a breath—
And love is mightier than death!

CHAPTER XXXII.

SILVIA'S OPINION OF LORD MONFORD.

LADY IANTHE HUTTON was proud and difficult to please, but the grace and sweetness, the goodness and truth of her companion had won upon her as nothing had ever done before. She began to love the gentle, self-sacrificing girl who was so anxious to do her duty, and to do what was right in every way. She talked to her familiarly, as she would have done to her own sister; the distinction of rank seemed no longer to exist between them. So, on this evening, when the visitors had all gone, and Lady Leeson, with a very dignified air, had retired to her chamber, Lady Ianthe turned to her companion.

"I do not feel sleepy," she said, "and you look quite wide awake—let us have a cup of chocolate in my room."

The maid was summoned, Lady Ianthe threw off the costly dress and brilliant jewels as though she were tired of them. Mrs. Rymer thought how beautiful she looked in her white wrapper, with that mass of fair hair falling like a veil around her.

"Now, Honor," said Lady Ianthe, "two cups of chocolate, and then you can go; there will be no need to wait."

She looked so beautiful—with the spoon just touching the chocolate—a smile on her face, half-grave, half-mischievous.

"Mrs. Rymer," she asked suddenly, "how old are you?" Silvia looked up in wonder.

"Twenty," she replied.

"That is very young to be left a widow with a little child; what did you tell me your name was? I have forgotten."

"Silvia," she replied. "It is an old-fashioned name."

"But a very pretty one," said Lady Ianthe; "though, you are so delicate and graceful, Lilian, Violet, Grace, or some name of that kind would have suited you better. I am tired of calling you Mrs. Rymer—it does not seem natural; you look too childlike to be Mrs. any one. I shall call you Silvia. May I?"

"I shall be very pleased," said Mrs. Rymer, with a blush.

"Well, then, tell me, Silvia, how you have enjoyed this evening?"

Her heart beat, for she saw what lay before her, and she did not half like duty that had been imposed upon her.

"I have enjoyed it very much," she replied; "and, Lady Ianthe, as you are so kind to me, let me tell you how very much I admire a gentleman who certainly admires you."

Her whole face lighted with pleasure; her eyes brightened, her lips wore a soft, luminous smile.

"I thought you would—every one says so. He is so handsome—there is no one like him."

"I did not think him handsome," she replied; "but his face struck me as being very intelligent and clever, honest, and true."

Lady Ianthe looked at her with an amused smile.

"You are the only person in the world who does not think Mr. Raymond handsome."

"Mr. Raymond!" repeated Silvia; "I was not thinking of him. I meant Lord Monford."

The whole expression of the beautiful face before her changed.

"Lord Monford!—I never thought of him at all," she said, slowly.

"I must be true to my colors," thought Silvia.

"I admired him very much, Lady Ianthe; I saw so much that was amiable and good about him."

"Very possibly. I rather admired him, I think, before he accepted me."

"Did he ever annoy you?" asked Silvia, gravely. "I am rather surprised at that. I thought him a true gentleman."

"So he is, in that sense of the word. Perhaps 'annoy' is too strong an expression. I mean, that quite unconsciously to himself he gave me some little trouble."

"He looks as though he would save you from all the trouble in the world, if he could," said Silvia.

"We will not discuss him. He is very worthy and good, but he does not interest me. Now, Mr. Raymond is handsome; I think he has the most picturesque face I ever saw. I have known him a long time."

And into her beautiful eyes came an expression that seemed to say:

"Do talk to me about him; my heart hungers to hear his name."

"We were children together," she continued. "The Raymonds are near neighbors of ours, at Leesdale."

"He is handsome," said Silvia; "but his face does not look to me so trustworthy or so good as Lord Monford's."

Lady Ianthe became quite animated in the discussion, and all the time she talked her slender fingers clasped the golden chain.

"We are such old friends," she continued, after a pause, "and I think it is so natural to feel a warm interest in old friends."

"You have known Lord Monford long?" asked Silvia.

"I never met him until this season; he is a friend of papa's, not of mine."

"Poor unconscious child!" thought Silvia; "how little she knows."

Lady Ianthe looked up with a smile on her beautiful face.

"Not only is he a friend of my father's," she continued, "but I have always claimed him with my father. Either he must be very old, or I am impertinently young. Which is it, Silvia?"

"Lord Monford does not look forty," she said.

"Forty!" repeated the beautiful lips in delicate scorn. "Why, that is not only old, but ancient, Silvia."

"It is generally considered the prime of life," and then Lady Ianthe laughed heartily.

"I could almost fancy my lord had been bribing you," she said, "but that you are too true; he could not have a warmer advocate."

"I do certainly like him," said Mrs. Rymer, "and I have a fashion of saying what I think."

"But you do not like him better than Mr. Raymond, do you?"

"If I am to speak honestly, yes, I do."

Lady Ianthe looked disappointed.

"Ah! that is because you do know him. If you knew Mr. Raymond, you would see that there could be no choice."

She was silent for a few minutes, then she continued:

"A good opinion is always worth having. Will you tell me, Silvia, why you, a stranger, who could have no possible interest in either, at first sight, preferred Lord Monford to Mr. Raymond?"

Silvia looked slightly distressed.

"I would far rather not answer you," she said.

"And I would far rather know," replied Lady Ianthe.

"It struck me," said Silvia, "that Lord Monford had the face of a man who could be relied upon in any emergency—who would be calm, steady, and true. Mr. Raymond looks rather as though he would be frightened at an emergency, and get out of it, if he could."

"But that would be very unmanly," she said.

"Yes; I cannot help telling what struck me with both, but I may not be right."

"No," said Lady Ianthe warmly; "I do not think you are. I do not like this chocolate, it is not nice. I think I am tired, and will say good-night, Silvia."

And Silvia knew by the sound of her voice that she was not only unhappy, but greatly perplexed.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

AN OMINOUS DREAM.

A month had passed away, and Silvia had most carefully kept her promise; at every opportunity, and in every possible way she had spoken of Lord Monford. The result was that Lady Ianthe had ceased to dislike him, she even joined in praising him, and spoke well of him; but as for love, she was farther from it than ever. Silvia saw that plainly; she saw something else too—that not all the influence ever brought to bear upon her would induce her to give up Clifford Raymond.

Not that she spoke often of him—it would have been a far more favorable symptom if she had done so; but that it was easy to see she had some deep, happy memory ever brooding in her heart—a something that seemed to keep her apart from the rest of the world—to make her quite indifferent to it; and this some thing could only be love. Silvia never flattered. Lady Leeson trusted her implicitly; and so upright, so honest was she, so entirely truthful and conscientious, that Lady Ianthe trusted her also, and she wronged neither. Time, as it passed, brought no change, until one day the countess, with distress on her face, asked Silvia to come to her room again.

"We shall grow quite accustomed to these solemn conferences," said her ladyship, with a weary smile. "This makes the third. Oh, Mrs. Rymer what a comfort it is, what a blessing it is to be able to close that door and let mask fall—not to be obliged to pretend any longer that I am happy, prosperous, or quite at ease!"

And the weary woman of the world flung herself into the depths of a luxurious chair with a sigh that would have moved the coldest heart.

"I am so tired," she said. "Oh, so tired of acting a part. It would be a positive relief to me if I might say to every one, 'We are ruined—beyond redemption; there is no need for any further concealment. We are ruined; say what you like about us.' Oh, the luxury of saying that—of telling that there is no need of concealment! But it will never be; we must keep up appearances till we die."

"It is hard," said Silvia, with true, deep sympathy.

"Here is the worst of it," continued the countess; "if that tiresome child would but marry Lord Monford, all would go well; if she will not, another few months will see us ruined—completely ruined. We shall have to leave England, and hide ourselves in some wretched little place abroad. How shall we bear it?"

"It may not come to that," said Silvia.

"It will—it is coming. I told you how delighted we were when Lord Monford laid his proposals before us. Did I tell you that my husband did not dare to tell him how scornfully they were rejected? On the contrary, he said something to him about there being every ground for hope, but praying him to give Ianthe more time, and to let the matter stand over. That is two months since. This morning he has been to my husband again, and has asked plainly if we have any reason to think she is attached to Mr. Raymond; if so, he says he will at once withdraw all pretentions to her hand. Of course, Lord Leeson said no; nothing of the kind; that they had been children together, and were attached to each other in a friendly way, nothing more. Lord Monford expressed himself quite satisfied, but asked permission to see Ianthe himself, and lay his offer before her.

"My lord could not refuse; he appointed Saturday, putting it off as long as he could, in order that he might have time to reason. If she persists in refusing we are lost. Oh, Mrs. Rymer, help me to think what I can do to make her consent."

Tears rose to Silvia's eyes; she felt grieved for the unhappy mother, and still more grieved for the daughter. There was a foreboding on her, too, that the worst had not been realised.

"What do you advise?" asked the countess. "You have done your best, as I have both seen and heard. Do you think she cares any more about Lord Monford than she did?"

"I will answer you quite truthfully," replied Silvia. "I think she likes him in a friendly kind of way, but she is as far as ever from loving him."

"Do you think she really loves the other one?"

"Yes, she does indeed; and if I can judge her rightly, she will never care for any one else while she lives."

"What shall I do?" cried Lady Leeson, despairingly.

"The only plan that I can suggest is to tell her the truth; she will listen to it. She is naturally very noble, and would do anything, I am sure, to help you. Tell her the whole truth, and let her decide."

"It will be such a shock to her," said Lady Leeson; "I can hardly endure to think of it. She has never had the faintest idea of it; she has been accustomed to luxury all her life, and I shrink from telling her."

"She must know it; there is no alternative. You had better show her what depends upon her, and then she can decide. Lady Leeson, will you pardon me if I say something else?"

"Say what you will; I am only too pleased to talk to you," said the countess, sadly.

Silvia's face flushed with the earnestness of her words.

"I think," she said, "that you quite misjudge Lord Monford. I am quite sure that he would never bring such entire ruin upon you for the sake of a little extra money. Instead of deceiving him with false hopes, tell him the truth, and trust to his mercy."

Lady Leeson laughed a bitter, satirical laugh that was not pleasant to hear.

"You do not understand men of the world," she said. "Lord Monford would simply shrug his shoulders if such a thing were mentioned to him, and say it was a matter in which he could not interfere, as it was quite in the hands of his lawyers."

"I do not think it," said Silvia, earnestly. "I believe in faces, and his is no goose, so true."

"You are romantic, Mrs. Rymer. Between men's face and a hundred thousand pounds there is no connection at all. Lord Monford is neither better nor worse than his neighbors, but we have no right to expect him to be more generous."

"I feel convinced that he would be so if you would but try him," persisted Silvia; but Lady Leeson only looked graver for her words.

"You want me," she said at length "that if Lady Ianthe refuses him as I begin to fear she will, after that it would be impossible for the Earl of Leeson to whine out for mercy. If she could but be brought to accept him, all would be well."

"Ask her," said Silvia; and Lady Leeson looked up with a smile.

"That is the most sensible thing you have said yet. I will ask her at once. Go to her, Mrs. Rymer; tell her to come and speak to me. Stop," added the countess. "I think you had better stay with us. Lady Ianthe is fond of you, and you have some influence over her. Will you stay with us while I talk to her?"

"If you think that I should be useful, and she would not resent it, I will do anything I can, Lady Leeson."

She found Lady Ianthe among the flowers. She looked up with a bright smile on her face.

"How earnest you look, Silvia. I was just thinking of my dream. Do dreams ever come true, or, as the old women say, do they go by contrary?"

She stood caressing with her white fingers some rich crimson flowers as she spoke.

"What did you dream?" asked Silvia, quite willing to delay her message a few minutes.

"It is almost too foolish to be told. I dreamed that I was married—never mind to whom—and I stood turning my wedding ring round on my finger."

"There is nothing very wonderful in that, Lady Ianthe. Most probably it will come true some time or other."

"But you have not heard the strangest part of my story, or rather my dream. As I was looking at my ring, suddenly it changed into a small, living serpent, with bright eyes and a forked tongue, and it sprung at me."

"That was not so pleasant; but, dearest Lady Ianthe, it was only a dream."

"So I kept saying to myself. Yet it was not a nice one—it made me nervous; but I have been comforting myself by thinking that the ring I shall wear will be far more likely to turn into a beautiful white dove, and coiled round me."

She bent over the flowers and touched them with her sweet lips. Then Silvia said to her:

"Lady Leeson wishes to see you; she is in her own room, and would like to see you there."

"I will go at once," said Lady Ianthe; "it is not often that mamma sends so hurriedly for me."

CHAPLER XXXIV.

AN EMPHATIC REFUSAL.

Lady Leeson did not look as though the task before her was a very easy one. When her daughter entered the room she went up to her.

"Ianthe," she said, "I wish to see you particularly; "I have something to say to you."

"You forget, mamma, that we are not alone," replied the young girl, looking at Silvia.

"I have asked Mrs Rymer to stay; she is a good friend of yours, and will perhaps help you with a little counsel."

Lady Ianthe was most warmly attached to the gentle, beautiful girl, whose sad face and sweet voice had charmed her, but to one so proud as herself, there was something not altogether pleasing in her mother's words. She did not quite admire being talked to before one who, until lately, had been a stranger. She made no remark, but raised her eyebrows, and the countess understood perfectly what she meant. Still, Lady Leeson considered that Mrs. Rymer might prove a most useful auxiliary in the struggle that must ensue.

"I have sent for you, Ianthe," began the countess, uneasily, "because I feel a sure hope that the warmest and dearest hope of my life is about to be gratified."

"What hope is it, mamma?" asked her daughter, calmly.

"The hope of seeing you Lord Monford's wife. How I have longed for it, you, Ianthe, will never know."

"I am very sorry to hear it, mamma."

"Why, my dear?—why be sorry for an idea that gives both your father and myself more comfort than any other idea could?"

"Because it is as impossible for me to marry Lord Monford as it would be for yourself to do so," replied Lady Ianthe.

The countess raised her eyes in most pious horror.

"My dearest Ianthe, that is not a nice way to speak—it is not, indeed. You forget, my love, that I am a married lady. If I were not, and I were young enough to be honored by Lord Monford's choice, all I can say is, I should accept him."

Lady Ianthe laughed, and the sound, so like a chime of silver bells, gladdened Silvia's heart. There could not be anything very grievous if the young girl could laugh so gladly.

"It is no laughing matter, Ianthe," said the countess gravely. "Listen. Lord Monford has been with your father, and has renewed his proposals for your hand."

"I hope papa has refused them," said Lady Ianthe.

"On the contrary, he has, I believe, given his lordship some little reason for hope."

A DELUSIVE ARGUMENT.

(London Free Press.)

In applying free trade arguments for the purpose of bolstering up the Wiman fad, the Liberals are simply perpetrating a fraud on the people. There is no relation between free trade and commercial union, and in arguing for the latter no one can fairly use the reasoning of Cobden. It is well that this point should be carefully borne in mind, because it is clearly the purpose of the Liberals to rally beneath their new banner those who are opposed to protection on broad principles. Under commercial union we should be obliged to adopt the higher tariff of the United States, and instead of general free trade we should only have a one-sided arrangement, by which British goods would be more heavily taxed than at present. This might be satisfactory to the American manufacturer, but it would scarcely commend itself to those who are out-and-out free traders. The American manufacturer would favor such an arrangement for three selfish reasons in chief:—First, because he would have a free avenue for his goods in Canada; second, because he might reasonably expect to see Canadian production lessened, and third, because the higher American tariff would shut out a considerable proportion of British wares now brought into this country. He would gain a wider market, to the precise extent that Canadian industries were crushed and British goods excluded. This would not be free trade, but the worst form of evil which protection is capable of causing. Mr. Wiman has not been blind to this fact, and in his addresses to Americans he has earnestly presented his view of the matter to them, though it is to be observed that he has never been quite so candid when talking to the people on this side of the line.

A further advantage to the United States is expected to follow upon Commercial Union. It is seen that the Americans would control our tariff and would also be able to discriminate heavily against Great Britain in trade; but Mr. Wiman, writing to one of the American magazines, foresees the probability of national aggrandizement as well. He says:—

"Such an event may have most momentous consequences, not only in Canada and in the United States, but upon the relations that will thereafter exist between Canada and England. It is to the very critical conditions that would thus be created between Great Britain and her greatest colony that the attention of the people of the United States is now most earnestly asked."

Words could scarcely be plainer. He means that under the arrangement, nominally spoken of as Commercial Union, the United States would be able to squeeze Canada into annexation and at the same time deprive England of interest in us as a colony. That is to say, if Great Britain found Canada leaning to the United States and raising a hostile and discriminating tariff against her, she might be disposed to let us slip from the colonial allegiance. This may be a question by itself; but it arises directly out of the scheme to which our Liberal friends are endeavoring to win the support of free traders. Under the guise of free trade with the United States, with its boasted advantages, the opponents of the Government hope to carry all that lies beneath the surface. There is, however, a serious barrier in the way of this exhibit. That barrier is the wide awake intelligence of the Canadian people, and Mr. Wiman with his span of horses and one hundred speeches, will not be able to wholly deceive his hearers on this side of the line. Delusions of this kind cannot be long sustained.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

CHARLES BREMNER has demanded payment in full for the furs that General Sir Fred Middleton took in "mistake" while the latter was in the Northwest.

AN electric brake has been devised in England by means of which a train going at the rate of thirty miles an hour can be brought to a standstill in a space of 200 feet.

IT is said that Mr. Laurier will make a tour through Ontario this fall. He will have a big undertaking to whipping into line Editor Pirie and some other good Grit editors who have been clamoring for him to step down and out to make room for Mr. Blake.

IF Mr. Blaine loses his pins as Secretary of State over the way he will have a good excuse to offer. It was not his fault that nature endowed him with a broader mind than it gave the man the people elected to the presidency or the colleagues he chose to assist in the work of government.

FOR a long time the health officers complained that they could not improve the town's sanitary state while pigs were allowed to be kept too close to houses. There is no excuse in that respect now, and, if the board has enough backbone, wonderful changes will take place in a short time. The work cannot be commenced too soon.

WHILE the fishermen of Gloucester are talking about shutting up shop, their fellows in Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island report the catch of mackerel and other fish one of the best on record. It was the howls of the Gloucester men that were largely instrumental in defeating the Bayard-Chamberlain fishery treaty. Their greed has more than overreached itself.

MORE than a year has now elapsed since Kemmler, the Buffalo murderer, was sentenced to be killed by electricity. The sentence was appealed against upon the ground that killing by electricity was a cruel, and unusual form of punishment, forbidden by the constitution of the United States. But it is doubtful whether any more cruel form of punishment could be devised than to keep a man with a death sentence hanging over his head for a year.

DURING a conversation with Police Magistrate Pattullo yesterday reference was incidently made to the report which Mr. J. K. Dexter, chairman of the board of health, sent into the council at its special meeting on Monday night. "I think," said the P. M., "that the board of health should prosecute persons charged with breaking the health by-law themselves, and not drag in outsiders. There have been only two cases before me so far," continued Mr. Pattullo, "and one of the defendants brought a medical certificate showing that his premises were in first-class order."

A BITTER over a year ago there was a great boom at Oklahoma, and hundreds of people from all parts of the United States were attracted to that place. They now find out that they made a great mistake, and are fleeing in all directions. The crops are a failure, and everything is burning up. A despatch from Kingfisher, I. T., says a heavy rain fell there on Friday afternoon, succeeding nearly a month of dry weather. Growing crops have been greatly damaged by the drought, and the rain came too late to do good in a great many localities. What a different story comes from the Canadian Northwest. There peace and plenty reigns supreme.

THE Farmers' Review of Chicago says that the continued and spreading drought is becoming a serious menace to crops of all kinds. Minnesota and South Dakota are the only States reported in which rains have been abundant and crops are thriving. Oats will be almost a complete failure in Kentucky, and probably will not return to exceed one-half the average crop in Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Missouri, Kentucky and Nebraska. Corn in Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, Kentucky and Kansas is suffering for rain, its present condition being 25 per cent below average. In Indiana, Nebraska, and Iowa local showers have sustained the crop in some counties, but in many other parts of these States, as also certain sections of Dakota, there is great complaint of drought.

THAT ALLEGED THEFT.

Mr. Hannahson Tells Why he Removed The Rope from the Saloon.

To the Editor of THE SUN:

DEAR SIR,—I beg of your space in your columns for a few lines.

It is with pain and regret that I have been compelled to take my pen, not to retaliate, but to preserve my dignity from the slander of one who has treated me in the most unmanly manner. In the Post of last week I find these words: "Some despicable party stole about 400 feet of rope attached to the saloon." Now, sir, it was I who removed this rope, but it seems to me that a man on his own place has a perfect right to secure himself from suffering injury without being called a thief. I took the rope with the intention that if any one should have the audacity to come in and take the balloon without permission that I should have some means of finding out the desperado, and of securing some recompense for the damage done driving through the grain a distance of about 300 yards. Moreover, I took the rope in open day light and one of Mr Campbell's boys was with me and saw as I cut it off, and I told the other neighbors who were around what I did. If this is stealing it is rather an open and new fashioned way of doing so. I removed the rope only a few yards and had those who took the balloon away done so in day light they would probably have found the rope. Moreover, I remained there until night fall ready to give up both the rope and balloon when any one should come for it. I was there when the boy first came to look for it and I told him where it was and offered to help him put it on the waggon. And for this I have been called a thief. I have still the rope and from me it can be had when there is recompensation made for the damage done. But this is trifling compared with the contumely and slander, and if there is any law against trespass, Hubbard will find out who is the guilty one.

Oh! if men would but stop and bethink themselves, it seems to me they would be more cautious concerning whom they try to stigmatize as thieves, or if they would say nothing but what they know things would be so much better in this world of ours. But let us still remember that as man's words are but the reflection of his inmost soul, be it corrupt or pure, and that it is only thieves and robbers that are ever ready to call an honest man a thief, and that only those who have no character to be injured care not how they may hurt another.

Thanking you for this much space, I remain

Yours Faithfully,
JOHN J. HANNAHSON.

A GRAND SUCCESS.—The most successful garden party of the season was held on the beautiful lawn at Mr. R. T. Hann's residence by the congregation of St. Mark's church on Monday night. The ladies had everything in ship-shape, and served refreshments in good style. The Citizens' band was present and added greatly to the evening's enjoyment. The receipts amounted to about one hundred and six dollars, which will be devoted to rebuilding the church tower.

THE P. C. TO-DAY.—There are four cases to be tried at to days police court. Capt. King and John Irving, of the Dufferin house, are summoned up on a charge of infringing on the health by-law. Robt. McGhee, a book agent who was tried some time ago for the alleged stealing of books and whose case was adjourned until last Friday, will be arrested and brought to court. Two Mono farmers will also appear for decorating each other's physiogs on the afternoon of the 12th.

A NEW P. S. BELL.—The public school trustees held a meeting in the council chamber on Friday evening. Some time ago the board asked for tenders for a 200-lb. bell, and, in response, received offers from Rice, Lewis & Sons, Toronto, A. & W. Johnston, Young Bros. and A. G. McKenney of this town. Young Bros. and A. & W. Johnston offered to supply the bell for 43 cents a lb.; A. G McKenney, 42½ cents a lb.; and the Toronto firm for 42 cents, on board the cars at Toronto. A. G. McKenney's tender was accepted. Fuller & Allen secured the contract of calcimining the school for $35.

STOPPING RUNAWAYS.—Prof. Simpson, noted as a tamer and trainer of vicious horses, thus explains the manner of stopping a runaway horse by using nothing but a straight bit and lines:—For instance your horse attempts to run away. Let him go for a distance of fifty yards; then hitch your lines perfectly tight. When you get ready to give the command to stop, say "Whoa!" at the same time you pull the right hand rein, giving a powerful jerk, and repeat the word whoa; don't move the left hand, but do the work with the right. When you give the terrible jerk you twist the horse's jaw to the right, and if you have the presence of mind to repeat the word whoa at the second jerk of the lines you will be surprised to find your horse standing still.

TROUBLE ABOUT A WATCH.—A short time ago William Henry, of Mono, swore out a warrant charging Thomas Edwards, John Longaway, jr., William Hicks with stealing a watch from him on the 12th of June, and Harry Scott with receiving and disposing of the same. Yesterday afternoon Chief Shields and Nightwatchman Puskin arrested the three last named young men and took them before P. M. Pattullo, who accepted bail for their appearance on Saturday. Bail to the amount of $1200 was taken in each case, the young men going $800 apiece and three bondsmen for $400. Mr. Latham Scott is Harry's bondsman and John Gilkinson and R. Allen for Longaway and Hicks respectively. The chief drove out a short distance to a farm where Edwards was employed and took him into custody. He was a porter at the Queen's hotel until a short time ago. He was not fortunate enough to secure bondsmen and he consequently lies in jail. The whole business will be ventilated in the police court at 2 o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

SERIOUS SHOOTING ACCIDENT.—At about four o'clock last Thursday afternoon what might have been a tragedy was enacted on Wellington street. C. P. R. Baggageman Davidson lives in a brick cottage on the western side of the street, and Mr. Jos. Gordon's residence is situated about seventy-five yards farther down on the opposite side of the same thoroughfare. Mr. Davidson is an admirer of fowl, and at that instant he perceived a neighbor's dog making away with one of his chickens. He ran into the house and grasped a revolver with the avowed intension of dispatching the dog. In the meantime the latter fled to the street, being pursued by the enraged baggageman. No sooner had he reached the street than he opened fire and bullets went whizzing in every direction, none taking effect on the canine. Now just at that moment Constance, the sixteen-year-old daughter of Mr. Gordon, had come into the street in front of their house, and before she had walked two yards a stray bullet hit her on the collar-bone and glanced off. The young lady was carried to her home and put to bed where she still remains suffering from the shock. Dr. Smith says if the ball had struck one-sixteenth of an inch nearer the young lady's chest she would have been killed. This serves as another warning against the too freely use of firearms.

THE MACKINAC TRIP.—The Great Northern Transit Company, Collingwood, as usual were the first in the field this season with their popular summer excursion to Mackinac and return. In another column will be found their advertisement announcing that their fine, staunch and comfortable steamers Pacific and Atlantic will leave Collingwood every Thursday and Monday. This is one of the most enjoyable excursion trips possible to take. The steamer passes thousands of islands and picturesque Indian villages on the voyage and makes a stop at each of the following towns on the south shore of the Georgian bay: Meaford, Owen Sound and Wiarton. The stops made on the north shore are Killarney, Manitowaning, Little Current, Mudge Bay, Gore Bay, Spanish River, Blind River, Algoma Mills, Cockburn Island, Thessalon, Bruce Mines, Hilton, Richard's Landing, St. Joseph's Island, Garden River and Sault Ste. Marie. After leaving the Soo the steamer takes a south-eastern course down the straits of Mackinac, calling at St. Ignace and several other American ports before arriving at the beautiful and historic island of Mackinac. There is perhaps no point upon the great inland lakes more interesting than Mackinac island. Here is established a United States military post, the fort being situated upon a rocky eminence, 150 feet high, overlooking a thriving town and commanding the strait. The steamer remains in this port some four or five hours, giving the passengers ample opportunity of visiting the many points of historic interest on the island, which is four miles in length. The time occupied in the trip is just one week, and for those whose time is limited and who wish to make a tour of the lakes no better or cheaper trip could be suggested.

It is strongly urged on the local authorities the propriety of letting the cows loose on the streets, to keep under the superabundant vegetation which now makes the Royal City like a little village way-back. If this is not done, we shall be hearing of little children being lost in the wilderness of our boulevards.—Guelph Herald.

TOWN PIGS DOOMED!

OSTRACISED BY THE COUNCIL.

They are to be Kept Outside the Fire-Limits and One Hundred Feet From Buildings and Street—Discussion in the Board of Health.

A special meeting of the town council was held in the council chamber on Monday evening and was attended by Mayor Walsh, Reeve Lindsey, Deputy-reeve Endacott, Ald Green, Bailey, Pinkney, Clerk Hughens, Chief Shields, three newspaper men and a little boy.

The meeting was called for the purpose of passing a by-law to aid the board of health in discharging its duties. For a long time the members of the board have held out that they could not improve the sanitary condition of Orangeville until pigs were excluded from the thickly-settled parts of the town; and they requested the council to make some provision to that effect.

ALD. BAILEY

introduced a lengthy by-law that complied with the board's request and a little to spare. The provisions of the by-law are similar to those of the fire limit by-law with a few extensions. Under the old by law pigs could be kept at a distance of seventy feet from any dwelling; but now the distance is increased to one hundred feet from any house or street. The council went into committee of the whole, Mr. Bailey in the chair. It received its third reading and passed.

THE BOARD COMPLAINS.

The mayor read the following communication from Chairman Decatur of the board of health:

To the Mayor and Council of Orangeville:

Gentlemen,—When we were appointed as health-officers for the town we knew the disagreeable duties we had to perform, and were willing to undertake it for the benefit of the town. And we have as far as we could (without fear or favor) done so. In a large majority of complaints that have come before us, we have gone personally and examined the places complained of, so as to be sure and be no unnecessary injury to any person. Now, sirs, there seems to be what we consider very important obstructions in regard to carrying out our views for the general health of the town, namely:

First—Our inspector not strictly carrying out the instructions of the board;

Secondly—The magistrate, we think, rather obstructs us in our duties by giving parties more time, and, as we are informed, not collecting the fines;

Thirdly—Your honorable body in not carrying out the petitions which the board believing to be for the general health of the town have laid before them.

BRIEFS.

Reeve Lindsey intimated that the rate of taxation would soon have to be struck. He also mentioned that the temporary bridge on Mill street was in a dangerous state. Ald. Bailey said they expected the new bridge would be completed next week.

The session lasted just half an hour, and when the business was completed the chamber was speedily deserted.

A MARKDALE OBSERVER.

To the Editor of THE SUN:

Dear Sir,—Being a visitor to your good town on the twelfth instant, I was much pleased with the celebration, and the evident desire on the part of your townsmen to promote the comfort and enjoyment of visitors of every shade of creed.

The band music was a principal factor in the pleasures of the day. Of one thing I was astonished, that the Shelburnoites discoursed their melody with much more exactness in time and true musical chord. Perhaps Orangeville depends upon its past record, and hence pay less attention to practice than formerly; or it may possibly be that Shelburne owes much of its superiority to its efficient instructor, Mr. J. T. Parks. Let the cause be what it may, Orangeville, as well as our own band, need not expect to maintain their status if they indulge in indolent security as to their proficiency.

Yours truly,
Markdale, July 21st, '90. OBSERVER.

GRAND VALLEY.

The Grand Valley orchestra intend giving a promenade at the residence of Mr. Robt. Beard on Wednesday evening next.

The other day a citizen shied a stone at a dog which was standing in the middle of the street. The missile didn't strike the canine, however, but went crashing through a plate glass window in Harry Stark's store.

The Grand Valley junior football club played a draw game with the Belwood club as the latter place last week.

While the two-year-old son of Mr. Robb, Amaranth, was visiting at P. M. Black's, 10th line, he met with a very painful accident. The boy was handling a bottle containing carbolic acid, when the cork flew out and the contents went down on the boy's chest, stomach and lungs, burning him fearfully. He is recovering under medical treatment.

A few days ago, says the Star, some person or persons put cartridges, loaded with ball, in several sticks of wood which were being used for burning lime on the farm of Mr. John Park, 7th con. When the sticks became ignited in the fire the charges went off, the bullets striking the wall of the kiln and knocking off the plaster. Had any one been close in front of the kiln at the time their lives would have been in imminent danger. Such actions on the part of any one are dastardly in the extreme.

SHELBURNE.

(From the Free Press and Economist.)

Messrs. R. W. Tuck, F. A. Campbell, R. J. Thomas, James Onslmers, A. B. Noble, Bell Bros., E. Berwick & Co. are having water power put into their premises.

Mr. C. J. Wheelock was in town last week making the necessary survey for a sewer, to extend from the highest point on Main street west to the Grist mill. It is expected that the surveyor's estimate will be ready in a few days.

While assisting at the raising of Mr. Wm. Cameron's barn, Shrigley, one day last week, Mr. L. Ostrander was struck on the head by a commander falling from one of the plates. It was a hard blow, but we are glad to hear that Mr. Ostrander is recovering nicely.

Last week's dailies chronicled an accident that happened a Mr. H. T. Smith, stenographer, Toronto. This was not the H. T. Smith formerly associated with the Economist, as many have been led to believe. Our H. T. is well and doing well.

The proprietor of the Royal Hotel justly complains of the petty thieving that is being practiced by some females. Plants have been taken from flower pots and carried away, towels stolen, &c. Mr. Tuck keeps a good house and is very attentive to his guests, and it is too bad to have his hospitality abused in this manner. There will be some prosecutions some of these days.

Mr. James Hamilton, of Melaneton, had a narrow escape at the C. P. R. crossing on Main street on Thursday evening. He was driving into the village from the west and could not see the incoming evening train on account of the high board fence on the west side of the track. The horses' feet were within three feet of the rails on the main line when the train came sailing in at a good speed. The team wheeled round quickly and just escaped being struck by the engine. This crossing is a very dangerous one as a fence hides the view of the tracks, and Lindsay's elevator is close to the track on the other. Steps should be taken to compel the railway company to have the crossing properly guarded when trains are coming into the yard.

Little Edna Munro, of Woodstock, 10 years old, left that town a few days ago, unaccompanied, to visit her parents at Edmonton, Alberta. The little traveller goes by the Canadian Pacific Railway to Calgary, then to Edmonton, 250 miles, by stage. The journey takes twelve days.

Don't hurry, don't worry, don't fret; don't heat your blood with "firewater," bathe frequently, dress sensibly, stick to the shady side of the street, or carry a sun umbrella, give thermometer a wide berth, and you shall rob the heated term of its avoidable discomforts and dangers.

A Question of Evidence.—Granger—"What's good for hay fever?" Parson—"Why do you ask me? I'm no doctor." Granger—"You've had it for twenty years. I thought maybe you'd know." Parson—"Humph! that's an evidence I don't know."

FOUL PLAY SUSPECTED.

WAS WM. ELSMAN MILES ROBERTSON MURDERED?

The Dead Body of a Chicago Sailor Found at Port Dalhousie—There Had Been Drinking, and a Quarrel—Suspicious Wounds and Bloodstains.

PORT DALHOUSIE, July 16.—Early this morning the dead body of a man was found lying on the bottom of the dry dock here, who was subsequently identified as Miles Robertson of Chicago, employed as wheelman on the steamer S. L. Tilley of St Catharines. The Tilley went on the dry dock here yesterday, and last night some of the men, among them the deceased, were drinking, and did not go on board till late at night, during which time deceased had an altercation with one of the other men, one or two blows being exchanged.

Dr. Coventline, the coroner, empanelled a jury to enquire into the particulars and this morning a verdict was rendered: "The deceased, Miles Robertson, was found dead on the bottom of the dock near the propeller Tilley with a lean cut wound on the back of his head, how done we cannot say, but such was the cause of his death, being supposed to have fallen or been thrown from off said propeller."

There is a feeling among the people here that deceased met his death by foul means, as the distance from the deck of the Tilley to the bottom of the dock is nearly 30 feet, and the body when found was lying full length, with the feet together and no bones broken, with a deep cut on the back of the head and a small portion of the brain oozing out of the ear, and there were blood stains on the gangway leading from the main deck down.

Was He Murdered?

BELLEVILLE, July 16.—The body of the man who was found on the lake shore near Three Mile Bay a few days ago has not yet been identified. A fracture of the left temple leads to the conjecture that the man was murdered and thrown into the lake. At first it was thought that it was one of the ill-fated crew of the schooner Breck, which went down near Horseshoe Island about two months ago, but the clothes do not support this conjecture.

GRAND LODGE OF CANADA.

Kingston Overflowing With Masons. Forecast of the Election of Officers.

KINGSTON, July 16.—Five hundred delegates were present at the opening of the annual convocation of the Grand Lodge of Canada this morning in the City Hall. Grand Master Walkem presided, and read a lengthy address, reviewing his official acts for the past year. Routine business occupied the attention of the Grand Lodge all day. The discussion on the third degree question was adjourned, and will come up as the first order of business in the morning.

Grand Master Walkem, assisted by Deputy Grand Master J. Ross Robertson and the members of Grand Lodge, laid with appropriate ceremonies the corner stone of the Nickle Wing of the General Hospital.

The election of grand officers takes place to-morrow. J. Ross Robertson of Toronto will be elected unanimously Grand Master and Hon. J. M. Gibson or Ed. Mitchell of Hamilton will be chosen Deputy Grand Master. C. C. Robinson of Aurora is in the field for Grand Registrar. The wardens will likely be A. McGinnis of Belleville and George Davis of London. For District Deputy Grand Master of Toronto district the candidates are George J. Bennett and Fred Jewood. Hamilton district will elect C. W. Mulligan.

The hotels are all filled and Kingston people were evidently unprepared for the influx of visitors. Mayor Brennan stayed up all night and personally accompanied late arrivals to private houses and managed to get sleeping accommodation for delegates.

FLEECED OUT OF $5000.

Alanson See of New York Buncoed at Asbury Park.

ASBURY PARK, July 21.—Alanson See, a retired contractor of New York, was fleeced out of $5000 in cash by card sharpers to-night. See is about eighty years of age and his mental faculties have failed somewhat. The card sharpers have left town. One of them claimed to be the son of Mr. Park, of the firm of Park & Tilford. See says he met the sharpers first on Friday, on the fishing pier. Young "Mr. Park" in some way gained his confidence and learned his history. Saturday the sharper met him again, called him by name and introduced his companion, whose description is not known. Saturday evening the young man took their aged victim to a house in First-avenue and induced him to play in a game, the description of which Mr. See cannot give with any coherency.

They had played some time for small stakes when the old man was told he had won $40. He was then persuaded to arrange for a game for a stake of $5000. He did not have the cash here, but agreed to go to New York for it. Accordingly See and the sharpers went to New York this morning. There they separated, each agreeing to secure the amount of the stake. See went to the Irving Bank, where he has an account, and drew $5000 in cash. He then met the sharpers and came to Asbury Park, arriving here at 3½ this evening. Within an hour from that time he had lost every cent of the money and the case was in the hands of the police. Mr. J. A. Bradley sent a telegram to Inspector Byrnes warning him of the loss and describing the sharpers.

The young lawyer never despairs—he knows that where there's a will there's a way to make money.

TREAT OLD PEOPLE WELL.

There is nothing in the world more pathetic than the meek, timorous shrinking ways of certain old people—we have all seen them—who have given up their old homes into younger hands, and resided into some out of way corner of it to sit by the fireside and table beneath as thankful of 'making trouble,' afraid of being in the way, afraid of accepting half of what is their due, and going down to their graves with a painful depreciating air as if constantly apologizing for staying so long. There is no scorn too deep and sharp for sons and daughters who accept this attitude on the part of those to whom they owe so much.

LONGFELLOW'S MAIDEN, who is—is a type of thousands of young girls who are emerging from the chrysalis stage of their existence, as they enter upon their "teens." Nervous, excitable, irritable, shrinking from strangers, unknowable forces within, each a mystery unto herself, our girls need the tenderest care, the most loving guidance, the most wise counsel. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, to safely carry them through this critical period, during which, in too many lives, alas, are sown the seeds of lingering forms of disease peculiar to the female sex. But this boon to womanhood will prevent all such diseases, or cure them if they have already asserted a victim. Women owe it to herself, to her family, and to her social station, to be well and strong. Let her then not neglect the sure means of such. ## THE GOSSIP OF A WEEK.

AN INTERESTING AND CHATTY LETTER ON CURRENT TOPICS.

The Grand Lodge A. F. and A. M. meet in Kingston—A Sad Double Drowning—An Awful Fire in Quebec—Dakes Buying Canadian Land—Divorce and Bigamy.

TORONTO, July 21.—The Grand Lodge of the Masonic order have been in session last week at the Limestone City—Kingston. They have had a truly grand meeting and during the opening the grand master laid the cornerstone of the Wards wing of the Hospital. Dogdas was astir over the ceremonies and hundreds of guests which she entertained. The annual elections were held as usual and resulted as follows:

Grand Master, John Ross Robertson, Toronto.

Deputy Grand Master, Hon. J. M. Gibson, Hamilton.

District Deputy Grand Masters given in order of their rank are:

No. 1 District, James Birch, Chatham. No. 2 District, J. P. Whitehead, Strathroy. No. 3 District, A. B. Mason, London. No. 4 District—William White, Mitchell. No. 5 District—William Telfer, Walkerton. No. 6 District—D. H. Hunter, Woodstock. No. 7 District—John Fox, Orangeville. No. 8 District, Hamilton—C. W. Mulligan, Hamilton. No. 9 District—D. F. McWatt, Barrie. No. 10 District—A. B. Hurrel, No. 11 District—G. J. Bennett, Toronto. No. 12 District—W. Miller, Queseme. No. 13 District—T. J. Lightburn, Cobourg. No. 14 District—A. R. Dargavel. No. 15 District—Colonel—Colonel W. H. Jackson, Brockville. No. 16 District—John Hark, Lothwell. No. 17 District—J. A. Fraser, Port Arthur. John Kingdon, Kingston, Grand Senior Warden; George C. Davis, London, Grand Junior Warden; J. J. Mason, Hamilton, Grand Secretary; Edward Hitchell, Hamilton, Grand Treasurer; Rev. E. J. Craig, Beaverton, Grand Chaplain; J. Boyd, Simcoe, Grand Registrar.

Toronto was selected after a spirited contest for the next meeting place of Grand Lodge.

A very sad double drowning accident occurred the other day at Bolton. A 9-year-old Toronto lad named Willie Griffin and his 60-year-old grandfather bearing the same name were the victims. The boy was spending his holidays in the country house of the old man. He happened to fall into a small river a few feet away from where his grandfather was sitting. Unable to swim the boy was rapidly sinking, when, with a courage worthy of a great hero, the feeble old man, despite his age, jumped in and tried to save his little grandson. But age will tell and 60 years are many. His efforts were feeble and soon weakened into nothing. There was no help at hand and the old man and little boy sank down into a watery grave clasped in each others arms.

An awful fire occurred in Quebec last week. Five persons were roasted to death. The fire started at 2 o'clock in the morning in a hotel in St. Joseph street, owned by Delmare and Doslet. The flames made such rapid progress that the whole house was soon in a blaze. On arriving at the scene of the disaster the city fire brigade worked with energy to preserve the surrounding property. They were not aware that on the top story of the house were five human beings asleep and suffocated, slowly coming to death. The dead bodies, charred remains rather, were found afterwards. The victims were Pierre Miranada, wife and three children, who had lately returned from the States intending to settle in their native country. It is believed that the fire was the work of an incendiary. An inquest was held.

A peculiar case has just come to light in Halifax. Some years ago George Dixon, a resident of the city married a widow, named Mrs. Mason. They lived together several years when Dixon, thinking to better his position removed to Winnipeg, leaving his wife behind until he could secure work and establish a home. Mrs. Dixon, in her husband's absence, fell in love, with a young man named Timothy Doyle, just half her age. Dixon, on learning of the matter, determined to secure a divorce. A few days ago a divorce paper was served on Mrs. Dixon. As soon as she received it she fled from the city and is now in Boston. The cause of her flight is apparent, when it became known that she was married to young Doyle on December 18, 1887, and she has never lived together ever since. Proceedings for bigamy will be instituted. Doubtless Mr. Dixon will have no trouble about his divorce, and that without stopping in the Senate, as the Nova Scotia laws of the period previous to Confederation cover such cases.

The population of the Dominion, as ascertained by the census of 1881, was 4,324,810; the estimate for 1890, calculated by the Registrar-General, is 5,000,000. The decennial census of the Dominion, as already announced, will be taken on Monday, June 2, 1891, that date being selected to make it uniform with the census of the United Kingdom and the colonies of the Empire generally. The system upon which the enumeration of the Canadian population will be made, will be that known as the de jure, the de facto system adopted in England not being suitable to these circumstances of a sparse population settled over a wide extended territory such as Canada's. The enumerator will be instructed not to take the census of those who have been absent from Canada more than a year.

The Revolutionaries that weird and truly awful crime which created such intense excitement both in America and England a few months ago, is shortly to be revived. The authorities are working on it and this fall the whole affair will be settled. The crown has retained Mr. H. B. Osler, Q. C., with the County Attorney Ball for the prosecution of Burchell. Mr. Osler in company with Mr. Ball, Detective Murray and Mr. Wm. Dixon, C. E. paid a visit to the scene of the tragedy a few days ago and interviewed some of the leading witnesses in that vicinity. It will be remembered that old man Robb testified at the inquest that he heard the [illegible] in the swamp the evening of the 17th of December, and that Mrs. Robb fired three shots, remained a minute and then drove off. Mrs. Robb came to Woodstock and gave the names of two young men who were shooting in the vicinity at that time. One of these is now in the States but the other is still here and will be called as a witness. This is another link in the chain against Burchell's favor.

English capitalists are buying Canadian lands in great quantities. Some of the best phosphate lands in the country are owned by Englishmen. There is however, plenty of fertile land yet to be had, and for this purpose a strong company with Montreal capital has been formed in London, Eng. The list of founders is a remarkable one. At the head is the Duke of Westminster, whose name is followed by the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the Duke of Sutherland and the Duke of Fife. These names are succeeded by a Marquis, two Earls, six Barons and the Prince Camille de Polignac. Then come a number of other well-known names such as those of Sir James Whitehead, Mr Mundella, M P, Mr Hampson, Chief of Lloyd's Bank, Mr Whitmore, M P, etc.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Weakening weather—The enervating summer days strain the nerves of the feeble and decrepit, and disease may eventuate unless some restorative such as these purifying Pills, be found to correct the disordering tendency. Holloway's medicine gives potency to the nervous system, which is the source of all vital movements, and presides over every action which maintains the growth and well being of the body. No one can ever estimate the necessity of keeping the nerves well strung, or the ease with which these Pills accomplish that end. They are the most unfailing antidotes to indigestion, irregular circulation, palpitation, sick-headache, and costiveness, and have therefore attained the largest sale and highest reputation.

The Stratford Sun says there are about 40 stores empty in that place, some of them the best stands in the city.

As life's happiness is made up of little things, think of how much happiness you convey to each other by kindly notice and a cheerful conversation! Think how much sunshine such sociability lets back into your soul! Who does not feel more cheerful and contented for receiving a polite bow and a genial "good morning," with a hearty shake of the hand? Who does not make himself happier for these little expressions of fellow feeling and good will? Silence, and, a stiff, unbending reserve, are essentially selfish and vulgar. The generous polite man has pleasant recognition and cheerful words for all he meets. He scatters sunbeams wherever he goes. He makes society seem genial and the world delightful. And what he gives is but a tithe of what he receives.

CATARRH,

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

Beauty

is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only ceased the hair of my wife and daughter to go but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmittou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

"Why has he done so?" she asked, proudly, "when he knows that I have once said 'No'?"

"You ask a pertinent question, my dear, one bearing upon the very heart of the matter. Your father did not refuse because it is his dearest wish, as it is mine, that you should marry Lord Monford. Our dearest wish, and we feel sure that you, our only daughter, will not refuse to make us happy."

The beautiful face brightened, and the bright eyes grew dim with tears.

"I would do anything to please you, mamma—anything but this."

"Anything except the only thing we have ever asked from you," said the countess, coldly; "the usual way with girls. They are all sentiment, ready to make any sacrifice, but the first favor asked from them is invariably refused."

Lady Hattie looked imploringly at her mother.

"It is not so with me, mamma; you know it is not."

"Then, my dearest child, listen to reason. You are our only child. You know how we have loved you, how we have always striven to please you, how every wish of your heart has been gratified, every least desire fulfilled. We have never thwarted you, never denied you anything—we have given you love, care, affection, and devotion. You have been our pride and our joy. Is it not so?"

"Yes, mamma," she replied.

"And now," continued the countess, "for the first time, we come to ask a favor from you, to ask from your hands that which will make us happy—your marriage with Lord Monford. He is all that any one can wish, I ask no fairer fate from Heaven for you, my dearest, than to see you his wife."

"But, mamma," said the girl earnestly, "I do not love him—I do not, indeed."

"That would come, Ianth; no girl could see such excellence as his, and not learn to love him in time."

"But I should want some little love to begin with, mamma," said the girl, sadly.

"My dear Ianth, I wish I could describe to you all the nonsense that in this world passes by the name of love. Which is best and most dutiful—to yield to a sort of morbid fancies, or to make two devoted parents happy?"

Sixteen Ugly Sores.

Vigilance is necessary against unexpected attacks of summer complaints. No remedy is so well known or so successful in this class of diseases as Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. Keep it in the house as a safe guard.

A BRACE GAME.

Husband and Wife Arrested on a Charge of "Raising" Bank Bills.

MONTREAL, July 16.—Joseph Berthiaume and his wife, Emelina Narbonne, have been arrested on a serious charge. About two weeks ago a butcher at St. James' market sold 58 cents worth of meat to a woman and gave her the change for a Bank of Hochelaga $10 bill, and it was not until some time after that he discovered that the bill was useless, or rather had been raised from a $1 bill. He did not see the woman again. This woman, Narbonne, subsequently went into Leclair's saloon, on the corner of Ontario and Jacques Cartier streets, and asked for change for a $50 bill. Leclair gave it but found shortly afterwards that he had been duped, as the bill had been raised from a $5 bill. He followed the woman home and made her give up the change, at the same time retaining the bill. He then notified the police, who placed her and her husband under arrest. Search in the house revealed a wooden box containing acids, type, glass cups and various utensils necessary for the work of raising bank notes. Their 4-year-old boy went with them to the cells. They appeared before Judge Dugas yesterday morning, but the case was postponed. It is supposed Berthiaume is the same person who some time ago tried to work off a supposed $20 bill upon N. Michaels.

THE GOSSIP OF A WEEK.

A CHATTY LETTER ON INTERESTING CURRENT EVENTS.

[illegible] Bald Red Man from Northumberland County.

TORONTO, July 14.—Fearful storms last week throughout the Eastern States and part of Ontario did an enormous amount of damage. Fields of hay and grain were flattened, fruit was very badly injured, and power lines were down in many directions. In Toronto [illegible] were blown right and left, [illegible] considerable damage and wrecked and had to relate several lives lost.

Last week the Prince Rupert inquiry was resumed at Hamilton. The commission consists of J. W. Langmuir (chairman), Hon. Timothy Anglin, Increased Hy. Cheney, Drury, Dr. A. M. Rosebrugh, and A. P. Cluff. The counsels for the commission appointed by the Ontario government in consequence of a resolution passed by the Prison Reform Conference held in Toronto last November requesting the election of the commission to investigate and report upon the operation of prisons, reform with the view of suggesting improved methods of dealing with the criminal classes." The commission will hold sessions throughout Ontario.

The Montreal Herald are seemingly having a great deal of trouble on account of the strike of printers. The other papers have been "out" now for several weeks. The Herald have managed to keep up appearances very well, despite the strike. The Printers Union have, it is alleged, been trying to buy up the low compositors the newspaper has been able to secure. In consequence three men have been arrested, including the President of the Union. Twelve of the apprentices have also had warrants served on them. They are charged with leaving the Herald without proper notice.

A very strange murder has just occurred near Brighton, in Northumberland County. A blacksmith named Miner, who worked away quietly in his shop when Charles Gerrie, a neighbor rushed in exclaiming "I'll show them, I've had too many of these things." He refused an axe close and three inches thick and as another man called Robert Leach entered the door he felled him with a terrible blow. Hadjen is a very old antagonism. In way explained "I've done the job. I've done Lary him. I've killed him and I killed Miner." The strange part the affair is, that it is not known for what reason the murder was committed. Half an hour before the awful crime was perpetrated Gerrie attempted to club Miss Leach, a sister of the murdered man. A dog, however, came to the rescue and kept the man at bay. Gerrie is considered to be a maniac. He has been arrested.

James Malcolm of the four Brothers Curling Club carried off a championship gold medal, defeating a large number of Americans. There is great rejoicing among Canadian curlers in consequence. The matches were played here, at the Grand National Curling Association are holding their annual meeting in the city.

Vicar-General Vincent, Provincial in Canada of the religious order of Holy Cross and Principal of St. Michael's College has resigned from both positions. His successor will be Rev. Father Morlon, a Parisian Frenchman by birth and education. He is a dynamiter and has spent the last six years in England. He will arrive here in a few weeks. Rev. Father Toely will succeed Father Vincent as principal of St. Michael's College. Both positions are very important ones in the Catholic world.

Ten election protest have been entered against Ontario members. In addition to those mentioned last week are protests against Mr. Awrey as South Westworth and Richard Tobey the Conservative member for East Middlesex. Bribery and corruption in every shape and form are of course, the charges.

Seven years is the penalty Mary for having seven wives. This is what Conrad Orr was a German polygamist of Berlin, Ont., was sentenced to last week. Some people would think that a man possessing seven wives would have punishment enough without any imprisonment but Conrad Orr seems to be exceeding fond of the married state. He has a mania for marrying, especially young and plump widows. He is a well-dressed man, 50 years of age, good looking, and with a glib and oily tongue. He found no trouble in gaining the ladies affections. Every woman whom he came across he proposed marriage to. In the last few years he has gone through the ceremony with its accompanying honeymoon seven times. It is estimated that he has a combined family numbering about thirty. The judge gave him one years imprisonment for each wife.

The 200th Anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne was celebrated in truly grand style in Toronto. A procession, gorgeous and glittering composed of between four and five thousand men marched through the principal streets of the city. The pageant took one hour and four minutes to pass a given point. Bands, banners, brilliantly uniformed men, and gaily decorated carriages and horses together with the immense size of the procession made many people say that it eclipsed in every respect any similar thing attempted during the late lamented Summer Carnival. Orangemen from the whole of the surrounding country were present and the ceremonies were eminently befitting the 200th anniversary.

STANLEY'S WEDDING.

The Event Was Consummated on Saturday Last.

LONDON, July 14.—Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer was married on Saturday to Miss Dorothy Tennant in Westminster Abbey. The ceremony, a very brilliant one, was witnessed by most of the notable people, including royalty, in England. Stanley has not recovered from his illness and was very weak throughout the affair. His best man was Count D'Arche, representing the King of the Belgians. The wedding breakfast was very largely attended. Mr Gladstone, Lord Wolseley, Sir William Vernon-Harcourt, Sir John Millais, John Morley and other notables made speeches.

The ceremony was performed by the Dean of Westminster, the archdeacon of Westminster, and the lord bishop of Ripon. The service was full choral. A great crowd congregated about the abbey and loudly cheered Mr. Stanley and Miss Tennant. Miss Tennant's dress of white corded silk, trimmed with white satin and embroidered with pearls and orange sprays. She wore a miniature of the Queen, which had been presented by her majesty as a wedding gift. All the officers of Stanley's last expedition into Africa were present at the wedding. Stanley, who reached the abbey first, rose upon the entrance of Miss Tennant, and the ceremony at once began. During the ceremony he held beneath his arm the stick which he was compelled to use for support while walking. As he repeated the service his voice was almost inaudible, showing the result of his illness. Miss Tennant's voice was clear and steady, and only faltered as she repeated the words "in sickness and in health."

A DANGER SIGNAL! A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that the most dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps insanity or Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. But for an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stopping of the drowpings into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

T. D. D. Loyd, 8 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the wonderful healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have previously tried with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to breathe and to speak freely. I shall not fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM INSTANTLY RELIEVES Cold in the Head. A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined. L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

NASAL BALM POSITIVELY CURES CATARRH. D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my case it effected relief from the first application. Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm seems to be the most perfect satisfaction of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cent for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing FULFORD & Co. Brockville, Ont.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. N. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leithsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 60 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

BOYHOOD'S HAPPY DAYS.

I am old, worn and gray,
Many years have passed away
Since I roved to school a merry fair-faced lad;
The world's grief and care,
Of them I've had my share;
But thoughts of boyhood ever make me glad.
The schoolhouse 'neath the hill,
Methink I see it still,
And the master's looks so kindly and profound;
The old mill by the stream
I oft see in a dream
And watch again the wheel go round and round.

In fond revery I see
Mother smiling down at me—
For we laid her in the village churchyard green.
There is one I'll ne'er forget,
Sweet Nell with eyes of jet—
Bewitching ways and form of graceful mien,
Together plucked sweet flowers,
In youths bright happy hours;
Oh then our hearts knew naught of grief and pain.
The rambles o'er the glade,
The fervent love vows made,
In mem'ry lingers while life does remain.

They have vanished one by one,
From the peaceful village gone,
Companions in those happy days of yore;
Many have won wealth and fame,
Pretty children bear their name—
Shall I ever, shall I ever see them more!
Some beneath the sod do rest,
Flowers above each withered breast;
And the birds are warbling forth in gladsome strain,
As they did when we were boys,
Oh! the frolic, oh! the joys—
But those happy days will never come again.

The Story Teller.

Thrown on the World.

AN EMPHATIC REFUSAL.

"MARRIAGE is not like anything else," said Lady Ianthe. "Once contracted, there is no breaking the bond; it must last for life, and if the whole life should be unhappy—oh, mamma!"

"But there would be no need of unhappiness with Lord Monford," persisted the countess. "If he were not all that he should be, I, for one, should object strongly; he is a gentleman, well-born, rich, of stainless character and high repute. What more do you want, Ianthe?"

"Some one to love," said the girl. "I do not deny one of his excellent qualities, but I do not love him."

"I detest the very word," cried the countess. "If you do not love him, Ianthe, it is because you will not. I know no one more worthy of your love."

Then Lady Ianthe rose, and went over to her mother. She knelt down by her side, and placed her hands caressingly on the countess' arm.

"Mamma, dear," she said, "you forget Clifford."

"Forget whom?" cried Lady Leeson.

"You forget Clifford, my dear playfellow, when I was a child, my dear love ever since I have been old enough to know what loves means."

Despite her self-command the face of the countess grew white with anger.

"I do not forget Mr. Raymond," she said; "but I am too sure of my daughter's affection to think she would let a person of Mr. Raymond's position come between her parents and herself."

"You always liked him, mamma," pleaded the girl.

"When he kept his place, my dear, as the son of a worthy neighbor, holding a very inferior position, people whom we may one day assist. I need not say that I ever dreamed of him as a suitable lover for the Earl of Leeson's daughter."

"But the earl's daughter has learned to think of him in that light, mamma."

"Then she must hasten to unlearn it," said the countess. "Ianthe, my dearest daughter, be guided by me in this case—you will never repent it. See, all my life I have never asked a favor from you. I ask one now. For my sake and your father's give up this absurd idea about Mr. Raymond, and, to please us, consent to marry Lord Monford—to please us."

Lady Ianthe turned away her face, but not before Silvia had seen the distress and anguish upon it.

"There is no prayer I will not make to you. Oh! Ianthe, do not grieve me by a refusal."

Lady Leeson's hands trembled; her face was strangely moved in its earnest pathetic pleading.

"No child," she continued, "could refuse a mother's prayer; and, Ianthe, I pray to you."

Lady Ianthe clasped her white hands.

"You make it terribly hard for me—so terribly hard! Do you not see that I am quite willing to obey you, but that I can not, for I love Clifford Raymond, and I am engaged to him."

A little cry of dismay came from the white lips of Lady Leeson.

"Engaged to him! But, Ianthe, that is but childish nonsense."

"Nay, mamma," said the girl, earnestly, "it is the dearest love of my heart—I cannot give it up. I would do anything to please you. This would not be just, for it would make Clifford suffer even more than me."

"He might be managed," interrupted Lady Leeson, eagerly.

But she replied:

"No; I love him, and I cannot give him up."

"Mrs. Rymer," said the countess, despairingly, "can you help me to bring this obstinate, wilful girl to reason?"

"Mrs. Rymer will not attempt it," said Lady Ianthe. "No good or sensible person would try to make any girl marry one man while she loves another. My answer to Lord Monford is a firm and decided refusal, mamma; I have no other to make."

"That answer I must take to your father, I suppose, Ianthe?"

"If you please, mamma. I had hoped that his lordship would have taken my first refusal; as he has not had the sense to do so, pray ask him, from me, to consider this as final."

"You will break my heart," said Lady Leeson.

"I do not think so, mamma, and I am sorry to displease you; but in this matter of love and marriage I must claim the right to please myself."

And with those words Lady Ianthe swept out of the room, leaving Lady Leeson and Mrs. Rymer together.

CHAPTER XXXV.

"IT IS TOO LATE NOW."

"What am I to do?" asked Lady Leeson, turning with a look of surprise to Mrs. Rymer. "She will never listen to reason. What will Lord Leeson say?"

"There remains the alternative I suggested," said Mrs. Rymer. "Tell Lady Ianthe the whole affair, and trust to her."

"It will be useless, I feel sure beforehand," said the countess; "but, at least, I will try. Oh! Mrs. Rymer, how full of trouble is life!"

As though any one living could possibly know better than herself, Silvia almost wondered. It seemed to her that this trouble of bankruptcy of money was nothing compared to the tempest of grief that had fallen over herself.

"I will go to her to-night," said Lady Leeson, suddenly, "and I will tell her all."

Lady Ianthe did not go down to dinner, and the countess looked very unhappy. It was such a desperate venture and so much was at stake, that she was nervous and frightened; her only consolation seemed in talking to Silvia about it.

"A few more years—only a few more years," she said, "and all would be well. Lord Leeson says himself that five years' careful nursing would bring everything right. It seems too hard that our only child should stand between us and all comfort."

Silvia could not encourage her with hopeful words.

"At the worst," she said, I have faith in Lord Monford; he will not let it come to the worst, I am quite sure."

But the countess had no faith in that belief.

"When a man's vanity has just been piqued by a scornful rejection of his love it would be useless to appeal to his compassion," she said.

It was late before Lady Leeson fulfilled all her engagements and was ready to go to her daughter's room. Silvia met her in the long corridor, and it struck her that the picture she presented was not unlike that of Lady Macbeth. The countess wore a long, white wrapper, and she carried a lighted taper in her hand; her face was pale with watching, great dark circles were round her eyes.

She looked up at Mrs. Rymer.

"I am going on a difficult errand," she said, "to try to make a hard heart soft."

And with those words she passed on, and Silvia entered her room. But she could not sleep; she could think of nothing but the scene passing in that chamber. It was well for her that she was not present, for Lady Ianthe's distress was pitiable.

The countess found her reading, and remonstrated with her on the lateness of the hour.

"You will make your eyes dim, Ianthe," she said, "and lose all your beautiful bloom by reading at night; never do that, dear."

"I did not care to lie awake thinking," said the girl; "my thoughts are not happy ones, mamma."

"Nor mine," said the countess. Then she placed the lamp on the table, and knelt down by her daughter's side. Lady Ianthe would have risen; she cried out in distress at her mother's attitude.

"Not to me, mamma—I pray you, do not kneel to me," she said.

It was perhaps the first time in her stately life that the countess had ever given way, but she did give way now; she hid her head upon her daughter's knees, and wept aloud.

"Mamma!" she cried, anxiously, "what is the matter? I never saw you like this before. What has gone wrong? You terrify me."

But Lady Leeson made no reply, she only sobbed the louder; and Ianthe's face grew white with terror as she looked at her.

"Mamma," she said, in a low voice, "if you know how you were alarming me you would speak. Is there anything wrong?"

"Yes; there is so much wrong," sobbed Lady Leeson, "that only you can set right. My darling, our comfort, our happiness, our well-being, I may say our lives, are in your hands, and I, your own mother, kneel here at your feet to ask you to have pity upon us."

Lady Ianthe bent down, and with her cold lips touched her mother's face.

"Do not cry so, mamma; I will do anything I can; is it—is it about that marriage?"

Then Lady Leeson sobbed out the whole pitiful story.

"No one can help us but you, Ianthe," she said, despairingly. "If you will marry Lord Monford, all will be well, and we need not fear; you will have rescued us from privation, bankruptcy—horrors that I dare not face—horrors that will kill me."

No word came from the white lips.

"Ianthe! Ianthe! I have never known such trouble as this, and, my darling, I cannot bear it; my life has been so brilliant, so luxurious. How am I to bear ruin?"

"But is it certain?" asked the girl, with a long, shuddering sigh.

"Certain as that Heaven shines above us," said the unhappy mother.

"Lord Monford would never proceed to such extremities; he does not seem so mercenary," said Lady Ianthe.

"If you humiliate his pride, and wound his vanity, by refusing his love," said Lady Leeson, "I leave you to guess what measure of mercy we may expect from him. Ianthe, there is no daughter living who would hear her mother praying for Heaven's sake, and refuse her prayers."

Her beautiful head drooped, and a look of unutterable despair came over the fair young face.

"If I had but known," she murmured to herself—"if I had but known."

"It grieves my very heart," said the countess, "to urge you to this sacrifice of your love, but I know that, were I in your place, I should not hesitate, Ianthe; I should sacrifice my own love and inclinations to save my parents. I should not hesitate one moment between the two, and you will not hesitate, my own Ianthe."

The countess clasped her white arms round the beautiful figure, and she drew the white face to her own, she kissed the beautiful lips.

"You will not refuse," she murmured. "You, the little child I nursed in my arms, my darling, whom I have loved and been so proud of—you will save us. I never doubted that you would do it when you knew the truth. I did not like telling you, Ianthe. You have never known a shadow of trouble, and I thought it might have been averted."

The bright head was bent still lower.

"If I had but known before, mamma," she said. "If you had told me this when Lord Monford first asked me to marry him, I would have put all other thoughts away, all hopes of happiness, and dreams of love. I would have married him, and have saved you."

"My dearest child, I knew it. Mrs. Rymer judged you rightly: she said if you knew all you would be guided by our wishes."

"I would have been. Why did you not trust me? it is too late now."

Lady Leeson looked up with a cheerful smile.

"No, my darling, it is not too late," she said. "Oh! I am so thankful—so grateful, Ianthe; if I were to lay my life down for you it would not repay you."

"You do not understand," cried the girl; "I say it is too late—"

"And I," interrupted the countess, with a smile, "say it is not too late. Your father was very careful—he said nothing of your rejection, so that it is not too late. Oh, Ianthe, if it were—if it were, I should kill myself, I could not bear ruin."

The young girl shuddered—a long, terrible shudder, that seemed to make her whole frame tremble.

"Kill yourself!" she repeated. "Oh, mamma, what a terrible thing to say!"

"And a terrible thing to do' my darling; but death is easier for a proud woman to bear than disgrace."

Slowly and gravely Lady Ianthe repeated the words after her.

"Death is easier to bear than disgrace for a proud woman."

The words died away with a low moan on her lips. Then she rose suddenly, and with both hands pushed back the hair from her brow. "Leave me now, mamma," she said; "I cannot bear any more: I will think—I shall go mad if you say much more to me now. Leave me—leave me for two days, and then I will tell you—something."

Looking into the agonized face before her, the countess saw that it would not do to urge the young girl any further. She kissed her, murmuring gentle caressing words over her. She laid her hands on the bright hair.

"My beautiful Ianthe," she murmured, "My dearest child!"

But the despair on the young face grew no less.

"Do leave me, mamma," she moaned. "You are very kind; but I can not bear any more."

"Good-night, then, my darling. I leave you a heart full of love and thanks; I leave you undying gratitude."

But Lady Ianthe turned away with a low moan. The countess was not alarmed by her daughter's depression.

"I did not think she cared so much about Clifford," she said; "but sometimes these boy-and-girl attachments are serious affairs."

The countess slept better that night than she had done for a long, long time. True, Ianthe seemed dreadfully distressed, but she would get over that in time, and all would be well.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

A STARTLING REVELATION.

Silvia sat in her room wondering and thinking, longing to help those whom she knew herself powerless to help. She could not bear to think of that young life, with its terrible blight—of the love that must bring unhappiness one way or another; she tried to think what she should have done in Lady Ianthe's place; if in the sunny days of her happy love she could have given up her love—and she knew that death would have seemed a thousand times easier.

She was thinking so deeply that she did not hear the light steps that came nearer and nearer to her room door; not until the handle was turned gently did she realize the fact that any one was there. Nearly two o'clock in the morning—who could it be? She went quickly and opened the door. It was Lady Ianthe, who entered silently, closed the door, and turned the key.

"I want to talk to you," she said, abruptly. "I could not wait until the morning, for it seems to me that I am going mad to night."

"It seems to me," said Silvia, "that though the night is warm, you are shivering with cold. Let me wrap this cloak round you, and then you shall talk as long as you will."

She felt the violent trembling that seemed to convulse the slender frame; she saw the agony in the white face.

"Dear Lady Ianthe," she said, clasping the cold hands in her own, "do not look so unutterably wretched;" there is always a silver lining to every cloud. The night can never be so dark but that the dawn comes after it."

"There can be no dawn for me," said Lady Ianthe, and the voice was so hoarse so changed, that Silvia hardly knew it; "no light, no dawn. I am lost. In all the wide world that the sun shines on there is no one else so wretched as I am."

She sat quite still for some minutes, with a far-off, dreamy look in her eyes.

"Any one who wishes me well," she continued, "could not do me a greater favor than in giving me poison, or throwing me into the sea."

"That is a morbid fancy, Lady Ianthe. Thousands live with a heavier burden than yours to carry, and yet they do not die, neither do they wish for death."

"You do not know how heavy my burden is," said the young girl; "how should you? No one knows it but myself. I have come to ask you a question, Silvia; you will speak the truth—you always do. Lady Leeson has been with me to-night, and she has told me a strange tale—such a strange, sad tale. Silvia, it seems almost a terrible thing to say, but I am not quite sure if mamma has told me the simple truth, or if she has been playing upon me, she is so anxious for this marriage; and yet she would not have wept bitterly as she did without some cause. Silvia, is it true—can it be true?"

"You mean about Lord Monford and the money. It is, I believe, perfectly true. Lady Leeson told me about it some time since."

"True!" she repeated. "Oh! what am I to do?—what is to become of me? True! Oh, Silvia, I shall go mad!"

"Nay! There are greater troubles, and people live after them," said Silvia. "You have but to decide between love of your lover and love of your parents. You have to choose between your happiness and theirs, and I will say the choice is a hard one—bitterly hard."

"I have always been proud of my name and race—proud of my long descent. I have been proud of my father's name and station, of his position, and of my mother's queenship in the great world. Ours has been a stately race, Silvia, and is not to come to disgrace."

"It could not," said Silvia; "it would be like the falling of a bright star."

"It should not if I could avert it," said Lady Ianthe, despairingly. "Pride of race is strong in me; but, Silvia, it is too late. If I had known this story before, I would have sacrificed myself. I swear that I would have foregone every hope of earthly happiness to have saved my race; but, oh, Silvia! how am I to tell you?"

"Do tell me, do trust me; I will do my best to help you. Why is it too late?"

"Because I am Clifford Raymond's wife! I married him secretly, three months since."

The words had a strange, almost startling, effect in the clear, silent night. Silvia heard them with a sinking heart, and Lady Ianthe seemed relieved at having uttered them. She went on rapidly, with a flushed face and bright eyes.

"I can not tell what made me do such a thing. I can not imagine how Clifford ever persuaded me. When I come to think it over, I am frightened at myself, frightened at what I have done."

"It was wrong," said Silvia, with a keen remembrance of how bitterly she had suffered for a similar folly. "I do not think that anything can excuse or justify such a thing."

THE BOARD RESIGNS.

The dispute that has existed for some little time between the members who compose the board of health, the health-inspector and the town council has at last come to an end. On Monday morning Chairman Deestar and Messrs. Hall and Carson handed in their resignation as members of the board. The reasons they give for resigning are similar to those expressed by the chairman of the board in a letter to the council, which appeared in THE SUN of last week.

When Mayor Walsh was spoken to about the matter he said their resignations would likely be accepted by the council and a new board appointed.

Inspector Shields and the board have not been on the best of terms for some time, and each wished the other to resign—or do some work. However, there is plenty of work to be done, and the sooner it is done the better.

PREVENTING EARLY FROSTS.

(Hamilton Free Press.)

A SUGGESTION for the prevention of early frosts is attracting attention in Manitoba. The first early frost which did damage was in 1885, when it fell on September 7th; thence after that date it occurred yet earlier, and two years ago August 9th saw a light frost that did much damage to wheat in the milk. Before the month of August passed there were repeated heavy frosts. If this were to be a yearly occurrence, it would undoubtedly be a serious matter, but the history of the country shows that the normal period for the appearance of frost is the middle of September, and the contraction of the land should be followed by the same results as in Ontario, where the date of the appearance of frost has gone steadily back (if there is any) in the season. The explanation of the exceptionally early frosts is to be found in the climatic condition of the country. A dry summer invariably means early frosts, while a season with a plentiful fall of moisture usually extends into September before the thermometer reaches freezing point.

This is due to the heat diffused from the full sloughs, lakes and rivers. Land adjoining large sheets of water is much more exempt from frost than the inland country. So far as indications go there is reasonable ground for supposing that the North west will be free from frosts this year. And yet there is always the danger of their occurring. A cool, clear night in August, with cloudless skies and a dead calm prevailing, and all the circumstances are favorable for a touch of frost under whose blighting influence 20 per cent. of the value of the harvest would disappear. The suggestion of Mr. Richard in the Winnipeg Free Press is to fill the air with smoke on such occasions. Since early frosts do not occur when the sky is cloudy, he says, it is obvious that artificial clouds made with smoke will answer the same purpose. As there is no wind or very little, the smoke will rise slowly and spread over a large area at a short distance above the ground. This is no new theory. It is being practiced in Europe especially in France for the protection of vineyards. In Manitoba the remedy is more easily applied and costs nothing, straw, manure or soil are abundant and of so little value that most of the time it is wasted or burnt. In Europe such stuff represents considerable value. Not only will the smoke prevent frosts on account of the clouds it forms, but it will also help the same result by reason of the heat it generates. A practical test of this experiment was accidentally made at St. Pie in 1885. In that year all the wheat at that place was more or less injured by frost, a small area of about 100 acres being saved. The owner, for the sole purpose of getting a dollar chips, had set fire to them at night and abundant smoke which resulted saved his crop.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE Hon Mr Mowat is seeking repute at a summer resort for a couple of months from office seekers. His friends must be getting tired of the onerous consideration business, and are making it warm for him.

SIR FRED MIDDLETON denies the statement in the press to the effect that he has certain telegrams and documents in his possession which would implicate Cabinet Ministers in connection with the confiscation of furs. The story is made out of whole cloth.

THE Postoffice Department has inaugurated a new system of refunding money to depositors in the postoffice savings bank. Checks are forwarded in lieu of money, thereby assimilating the practice of the department to that of the government savings bank operated by the Finance Department. By arrangements between the government and the banks these checks will be cashed at par by any chartered bank in the Dominion.

THE funny young man in the Telegram office, Toronto, drives at the Grit editor thus:—"Verily the provincial Grit editor is a mad man when he contemplates an upward tendency in the price of drinks. After paying ten cents for a taste of alcoholic moisture, he writes an editorial under the caption "A cheap country to live in. He scornfully enquires if ten cents for drinks is not an extreme development of high taxation upon the necessaries of life?"

THE authorities at the Woodstock jail have placed the prisoner Burchell under strict rules. Hereafter no one will be allowed to see him except his wife, lawyer or minister. The edict was prompted it is thought to prohibit the admission of such so-called detectives as Bluett of Toronto, who was allowed a private interview with the prisoner on one or two occasions. Under the new regulations Mrs. West Jones, Burchell's sister in law, is not allowed to visit him.

REPORTS from different points through out the Province show that the crops in the greater portion of it promise fairly well. Hay, except in the extreme east, is exceptionally good. Fall wheat has done well in most counties where it is much grown. Spring wheat and barley seem to vary much but may yield fairly in most places. Oats are badly rusted and peas also seem to suffer from too much dampness. Roots in the west now need rain. Apples are generally reported a failure.

WHAT if a fire had occurred in this town since Monday? Well, the only way to fight it would be a revival of the system which Orangeville disorded many years ago—that of using pails. Probably there are not many ratepayers who know that at the present time our system of fire protection is absolutely useless. The boiler has been in a bad condition for some time, and a skilled mechanic from Polson's Iron Works, Toronto, was engaged to repair it. The work is still going on.

MONTREAL, like Toronto, has a public park question on her hands. The last piece of property left for park purposes has been invaded, trees are to be felled and a factory is to take their place. The Star urges the people of Montreal to come forward at once and try to preserve this great boon for the city.—Globe. If Toronto and Montreal were like Orangeville in the park respect there would be no cause for trouble. This is sound logic—Orangeville never possessed such a thing as a public park.

THE largest vault in the Dominion is being finished in the Finance Department by Goldie & McCullough, of Galt, Ont., for the safekeeping of Dominion funds and securities. It is 22 feet by 17 and 13 feet high with a wrought iron gallery. It is built of three layers of steel plate each a half inch thick; Altogether 142 tons of steel and iron were used in the construction, and 18,000 screws. The doors are secured by 22 steel bolts with a combination and time lock, the whole resting on 25 feet of rock and cement with the solid rock of Parliament Hill as a foundation.

FROM the facts brought out during the labors of the Ontario Prison Reform Commission it has been shown that the causes of crime are partly social and partly administrative. Drunkenness is set down as the great cause of crime and is not curable by imprisonment. The importation of paupers, criminals and waifs of all sorts from the Old Country is shown to have swelled the prison population. The tramp evil is also connected with the prevalence of crime and can only be dealt with by sentences to hard work. These are the social points. The administrative are: the want of regulated poor houses, mismanagement of gaols by municipalities, inadequate supervision of immigration, the want of play grounds for city children, the need of better classification of prisoners, and more careful religious attention to prisoners.

CARDWELL.

Harvest has thoroughly commenced. The crops are all first-class in this locality.

All the bridges have been rebuilt on the Hockey road, but it is still in a bad shape.

Billy White, of Coulterville, has purchased W. E. Hall's threshing machine. Billy intends to make things fly in that line.

A question that is puzzling many people in this section is how the genial Johnny felt after being in Orangeville on the 12th of July.

John Wheelock has a steam saw mill sawing out the stock of logs. He will not rebuild the mill which was destroyed by the flood some time ago.

A curious little episode occurred around Cardwell last Sunday evening. Two gentlemen whose names are Joe, are going for the same girl. But Joseph J came in ahead of Joe at this particular time and drove his prize to church at Orangeville. Joe vows vengeance.

Some time ago your Melville cor. poked a great deal of fun and bluff at the invincible Rangers of Cardwell. Not seeing any reply from here Melville, no doubt, thought Cardwell had taken a back seat. But if the junction team really want to play we have fifty dollars to put up against their fifty that we can beat them every day in the week. Get a hustle on you, Melville, and let us hear from you soon.

A couple of weeks ago two gents who live near each other on the Centre road were at a barn raising at Mr. Robt. Jackson's. A quarrel arose between Joseph and Jimmy over the measuring of a post. Before friends could interfere Joe poked Jimmy rather hard with a spade, and then and there it looked as if genuine war would take place. The heroic Thomas Jackson jumped between the combatants and separated them before any blood was split. They "never speak as they pass by."

Now is the time you need sugar and you can buy the best and cheapest at INGLEHART'S.

The Owen Sound summer races will take place on the 13th and 14th of August. About $1080 will be offered in prizes.

Yesterday morning's mail arrived at four o'clock in the afternoon, just six hours late. A run off at Bolton was the cause of the delay.

An Indian lacrosse team from the Forks will cross sticks with the Lansdownes of this town on the Dufferin lacrosse grounds on Saturday.

Prof. Bready, the Cleveland balloonist who met with an accident here on the 12th, is recovering, so he says in a letter received by a friend in town.

P. S. Trustee Savage purchased the skating rink and ground on Tuesday for the sum of $1,025. The late Jas. E. Duffy held a mortgage on the property.

A team of horses belonging to Wm. Patterson, a Mono farmer, ran away on Mill street yesterday morning. The horses continued their run until they were caught in the Elgin house yards.

Twelve persons were iniatiated into the mysteries of the Sons of Ireland on Tuesday evening. The membership now amounts to eighty seven, while the applications swell the number to something over one hundred.

A correspondent, who formerly lived in Orangeville writes:—"I see by THE SUN that a lodge of the Sons of Ireland has been organized. You now have the Sons of England, the Sons of Ireland, but what's the matter with the Sons of Canada?"

WANTED.—A strong intelligent boy to learn the printing business. Apply to THE SUN.

EXCURSION.—On Wednesday, the 6th of Aug., the A. O. U. W. lodges of Fergus, Elora, Erin, Hillsburg and Orangeville will run an excursion to Owen Sound. Return fare from Orangeville Alton and Cataract $1.00; children 50c. Tickets will be good for two days.

SAVE THE CENTS, AND THE DOLLARS WILL SAVE THEMSELVES.—The best way to follow this excellent advice is to commence securing some of our marked down Dress Goods, Dry Goods, Parasols, Tweeds, &c. etc.
ENDACOTT BROS.

STORM-STRUCK ROSEMONT.—A severe thunderstorm passed over the village of Rosemont about 2 o'clock on Friday. It was accompanied by a hail storm, and for a radius of about two miles grain, fruit trees and vegetables were badly damaged. The windows on the west side of the buildings were completely destroyed. The hailstones were as large as plums.

HORSE INJURED.—One day last week Mr. Jas. Simpson of East Garafraxa had one of his horses injured in a rather singular way. The horse got its leg entangled in a barb wire fence and before he could extricate it drew it over twenty two barbs almost severing the leg off below the fetlock. The animal nearly bled to death before Mr. Babe could be brought.—Hillsburg Beaver.

NOT AMPUTATED.—Some five weeks ago THE SUN reported an accident that happened to a Mrs. Hollinger at the Canadian Pacific station here. The town papers led the public to believe that part of the foot had to be amputated, but a rising young medico informs us that such was not the case. Under the skilful treatment of Dr. Henry the lady's foot was saved, and she is now rapidly recovering.

BURGLARY.—Some time between 10 and 12 o'clock Saturday night a thief entered Wm. Fiddes' residence and stole a purse that belonged to Mr. F. and which contained $32. The thief, or thieves, also took an overcoat and cap, the property of Mr. Harry Shaw. The police believe they are on the guilty party's track. It seems there is a regular nest of the light-fingered gentry in this town, and the police are doing their best to break it up.

SUDDEN DEATH.—A very sudden death took place in this town on Tuesday night. Mr. Thos. Sawdon, who resides on Bythia street, retired in his usual health. Mrs. Sawdon followed him in a short time, but on going found him in bed dead. Heart disease is supposed to be the cause of death, he being taken off. He was 53 years of age, and had been in poor health for several years past. Deceased leaves a widow and two sons.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.—For some time past our correspondents have not been sending us news regularly. Our Mono Mills, Melville, Salem, Camilla, Coulterville, Credit Forks, and Shelburne correspondents seem to have forgotten that any news from their hamlets is acceptable. We earnestly request them to resume and keep the public posted in the doings of their citizens. THE SUN also wants correspondents at Alton, Charleston and every place in Dufferin. Write us for particulars.

SKIPPED.—A rumor was current yesterday morning to the effect that Harry Scott and Jack Longeway, who were connected with the watch-stealing case, had left town for New York. A SUN reporter investigated the case and came to the conclusion that there was some truth in the rumor. If the boys have not gone to New York, they are somewhere in Uncle Sam's domains by this time. Longeway was out on bail, himself for $400 and his father's bond for $200. They were both at Scott's livery stable at 8.30 Tuesday evening, but since then they have not been seen. It is said they boarded a freight train and went to Toronto, thence across the line.

FAITHFUL "JACK."—Mr. R. Westrop keeps a bakery on east Broadway, and is the possessor of a very intelligent and faithful canine which goes by the name of "Jack." When Ketchum's dog by law came into operation Mr. Westrop didn't feel like investing $1 for a tag, so he gave the dog away to a young lady residing at Alton. Jack apparently did not like his new quarters for he returned to Orangeville on the following day. After a brief stay in town Jack was given to a man who took him to West Toronto Junction on Dominion day, and nothing was seen or heard of Jack until the 12th. Just as the town bell chimed out six o'clock the faithful dog presented himself in Mr. Westrop's shop and stood with his front paws upon the counter and looked as if to say: "I am very hungry; please give me something to eat." And poor Jack did look the picture of misery after his long tramp. He now sports a town tag and will sojourn in Orangeville as long as his master remains here.

NO MORE OLD CIGAR BOXES.—For things possessing no commercial value the emptied cigar boxes have long been looked upon as useful articles. In printing offices they have been considered from time immemorial as the proper receptacles for "quads" and "leaders." In many dreamraking establishments they come handy to hold spools in. Filled with sawdust they are used as spittoons and as such they have often been used. Amateur gardeners find them handy and many a rare plant has found its birth in an exploder of "Flora de Habanas," and—strange mockery of fate—the other has many a time seen cabbage plants sending forth their first tender leaves in an old cigar box. Multitudinous are the other uses to which they have been put, because they could always be had from vendors for the asking, as the law declared they could not again be used to contain cigars. In future their places will have to be supplied by boxes of some other kind. The "Department," having found probably that the fiat that said they were not to be again used for cigars was sometimes disobeyed, has sent forth a new mandate which declares that all cigar boxes are to be destroyed as soon as emptied, under severe penalty for non-compliance. This circular bearing the usual authoritative marks, numbers and signature was delivered to the various local dealers on Monday.—Stratford Herald.

HUBBARD HEARD FROM.

He Gives His Version of the Affair from the Start to the Finish.

In our last issue there appeared a communication from Mr. John Hannahson regarding the mysterious over Prof. Bready's balloon, which lit on the farmer's farm. Mr. H. accused the persons who went for the balloon with doing damage in some of his crops. This week Constable Hubbard replies:

To the Editor of THE SUN.

DEAR SIR,—I beg space in your paper to give a correct statement in reference to that balloon episode, which Mr. Hannahson so grossly misrepresented in your last week's paper.

The Citizens' committee ordered me to assist Prof. Bready, and as soon as the balloon extended my boys and another of the professor's assistants started to go where they thought the balloon would light. It lit on Mr. Hannahson's farm on which Mr. Campbell lives. When they went to get it Mrs. Campbell refused them permission to do so. They were not offered help to put it on the wagon as said like Mr. Hannahson would have you believe. It was with reluctance and at the urgent request of the committee that I went that night to get the balloon, which would have to be shipped by the first train on the following Monday morning; and this was the reason that the committee sent me after it at that late hour. I did not go for the purpose of stealing it as that gentleman tries to make out. I saw his sisters coming out of a neighbor's house, and from them I got permission and instructions where to drive to get the balloon. I next went to Mr. Campbell's, and he took a lantern and came with me to get the balloon. Now, if this is trespassing it is dangerous to go to anybody's place, for they may have you fined for this serious offence. When Mr. McKenney, another assistant who was with us, saw that the ropes were gone, Campbell and Hannahson got very angry and said the ropes had not been taken off—or, in other words, said that we lied. Now, this is where the trouble arose. Hannahson then claimed damages done to his barley, and we claimed damages for the ropes that had been taken off the balloon; for if he intended to ask for damages he should have taken proper care of it. We offered to pay for the little bit of damage we had done, providing the ropes were returned. We also told Mr. H. that the committee would meet on Monday night, and I told him to present his bill and let the committee deal with it.

Prof. Bready remained in town for nearly a week, but neither he nor the committee, so far as I can learn, know of the whereabouts of the ropes.

Now, sir, there is a ring in the top of the balloon, and when the balloon falls the ring is always on the top. We did not find it that way this time, however, but, instead, it was rolled up inside, indicating that the balloon had been handled before we arrived at the spot. If Mr. Hannahson would think a moment he would not write such stuff about thieves, robbers and desperados. It was he who started on the committee and questioned its veracity. Such paragons should set a better example.

If Mr. Hannahson commences an action for trespassing he may not be surprised if he finds himself in an affair that will not be pleasant to his memory in after years.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for so much of your valuable space,

I remain,

Yours truly,
J. J. HUBBARD.

COMMITTED FOR TRIAL.

Edwards, Hicks and Longeway Committed for Trial on a Charge of Watch-stealing—A Health By-law Infringer Fined.

The only cases that came up for trial at the police court sittings on Friday were those of Wm. Hicks, Thos. Edwards and John Longeway, who were charged with stealing a silver watch from Wm. Henry of Mono, and Harry Scott, charged with receiving the alleged stolen property. F. M. Pattullo and Magistrate McKinnon presided; E. Myers, Q. C., appeared for Hicks, Edwards and Longeway, and A. A. Hughson was retained by Scott. The court-room was well filled throughout the trial, and a great deal of interest was manifested. Several witnesses were examined, but none of them could swear that any of the three young men took the timepiece. An adjournment until Tuesday was made. The case against Harry Scott was also adjourned.

On Tuesday afternoon the trial was resumed. After hearing additional evidence the magistrates committed the accused to stand their trial either before the county judge or at the fall assizes. The case against Scott was further enlarged until to morrow.

INFRINGED ON THE HEALTH BY-LAW.

Some time ago the board of health gave the proprietor of the Dufferin house a certain length of time to get the yard in rear of his stable cleaned up; but the latter not complying with the board's decree, was summoned to appear at the police court. Mr. Irving is away from town at present, but he was fined $5 and costs just the same.

SHELBURNE.

(From the Free Press.)

The brick work of the Waterworks well is completed. We understand that Mr. John Taggart, the contractor, made an excellent job of the work.

On Tuesday Mr. McKeown, of the Shelburne planing factory, was driving a horse and wagon when the horse attempted to run away, and in falling out of the wagon Mr. McKeown in some manner got his leg painfully wrenched.

Mr. David McCutcheon, jr., of Whitfield, met with a painful accident on Wednesday of last week. He was engaged blasting some rocks when the charge went off prematurely, burning him about the face and neck. The injuries are not serious.

On Tuesday evening two little boys, sons of Mr. William Stewart, of Melancthon, were playing with the cutting box. The eldest was turning it and the young, one got his left hand caught in the cogs, injuring the third finger so terribly that it had to be amputated, and the second finger is so badly torn that it may have to be taken off.

The Shelburne School Board held a meeting on Tuesday evening last and no one would have been aware of the fact had they transacted their business in an orderly manner. The language used was very disreditable to some of the members and could be heard more than a block away. The trouble arose over the promotion of one of the lady teachers.

About 6 o'clock on Saturday evening as Mr. William Whitten, of Amaranth, accompanied by his wife and child, was driving up Victoria street a dog ran out, near the railroad crossing, and frightened his horses, causing them to bolt to one side. The buggy was upset and the occupants thrown out, but were not seriously hurt. The horses then ran away, and when they were stopped at the Mansion House sheds the buggy was pretty badly smashed. The horses were not injured.

Mr Chas. E Noble met with an accident during the fire excitement at the postoffice on Saturday. He and others went into the rooms above the postoffice to locate the fire, but the smoke was so dense they were nearly smothered. They attempted to come down the stairway but someone had turned on the hose from the waterworks and they could not face the terrific stream that was pouring in. They then made for the front windows and kicked them out and in getting out Mr. Noble had a bad gash inflicted on one of his legs. Dr Rolstin found it necessary to put in three or four stitches. He will have a sore leg for some time.

Dr Barr, M. P. P., entertained a number of his old-time friends at Mulmur lake one day last week. Among those present were a number of local anglers, experts with the rod and line, and Edward Ferris, of Hornings Mills, was by common consent acknowledged the champion fisherman. To day we are informed that Mr. Wm. Noble thinks he is entitled to that honor, as he took home the largest string of fish on that occasion. On enquiry we learn that Mr. Noble only caught one trout, and a very ordinary one at that, and where he got the string of fish is a mystery to all. Did Billy McLean catch them when he was diving? Parties who returned home with a less number than they caught think that an explanation would be in order.

The Root of Evil.

Dyspepsia and constipation are the sources of various diseases, but root and branch may be removed by using Burdock Blood Bitters according to directions. It is endorsed by by the press, the public and the profession, and cannot be excelled for the cure of constipation, dyspepsia and all diseases arising therefrom.

A NOVEL CLOCK.—The French are certainly great on novel ideas. A new clock contains a novel application of the magnet. The clock is shaped like a tambourine, with a circle of flowers painted on its head. Around the circle two bees crawl, the larger one requiring twelve hours to complete its circuit, while he smaller one makes it every hour. Different flowers represent the hours, and the bees, which are of iron, are moved by the magnets behind the head of the tambourine.

Trouble at Melita.

Mrs. W. H. Brown of Melita, Man., states that two of her children and two others belonging to a neighbor, were cured of the worst form of summer complaint by one bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, nature's specific for all summer complaints.

The most agreeable, restorative tonic and mild stimulant is Milburn's Beef, Iron and Wine.

WEST MONO.

OUR NEW NEIGHBOR.—We clip the following from the Empire and Markham Sun respectively, as our Rev. F. Burt, for six years incumbent of Scarboro', and now of West Mono, having entered upon his new sphere on Wednesday last:

FAREWELL PARTY—PRESENTATION TO REV. MR. BURT, OF CHRIST CHURCH, SCARBORO'.

The parlors and bowers of Christ Church parsonage, Scarboro, were taken possession of by a crowd of friends of the Rev. F. and Mrs. Burt, who had extemporized a surprise and farewell party for Wednesday evening, 16th inst., having learned that Mr. Burt had accepted the call and appointment to West Mono, the wardens, Messrs. Jackson and Hewlett, with their ladies taking the lead. Amid the concourse of church members we noticed Rev. A. T. Fidler, Rector of Whitby, Rev. J. McKay, Presbyterian minister of Agincourt, and the Methodist body were represented by Messrs. John and Garry Annis and the Misses Annis, the Orange Lodge by Messrs. G. Camps, W. M. L. O. L. 164, T. Leslie, F. Camps, T. Ormerod, J. Keeler and other members. The hours passed away most pleasantly, being enlivened by strains of appropriate hymns and other set pieces. At 10 o'clock there was a general hush and a gathering, when the wardens called for the Pastor's presence. On motion of Mr. T. Jackson Mr. Hewlett presided and read an address which we give below. During the reading of the address Mr Jackson presented a purse containing $67.00. Rev. Mr. Burt replied in befitting terms for himself, Mrs. Burt, their son, Mr. W. A. J. Burt, and daughters, reciprocating the good wishes of his friends of all names present. Rev. A. T. Fidler, B.A., rose to add to the pleasant things contained in the address, having known Mr. Burt for many years past as a neighbor clergyman, exchanging pulpits frequently with him, and had found him a Christian gentleman. The honor done to Mr. Burt therefore gave him great satisfaction.

Rev John McKay next added his expressions of good will. For himself and Presbyterians in general of Scarboro Mr. McKay affirmed that it was a cause of sorrow to know that Mr. Burt was about to remove, his people were most fond of Mr. Burt, as a neighboring minister of the gospel, for he always brought good cheer with him whatever might be the occasion of the public gathering, indeed many were the declarations of satisfaction and good fellowship uttered in the past concerning Rev. Mr. Burt, and seeing a separation must be, in the ways of Providence, he was gratified at the proofs of esteem shown by the large company present, and substantially by the purse. Mr. T. Jackson, Mr. J. Humphrey, Mr. Shuter, Mr. V. Sparks, Mr. John Annis, were severally given opportunity to voice their feelings toward the reverend gentleman who is leaving a band of staunch friends.

It is almost needless to add that the ladies had brought with them well laden baskets, the content of which occupied the attention of the large number present. At midnight the pastor and his friends gathered around the organ and sang several hymns, to which were added short invocations and the benediction.

THE ADDRESS.

SCARBORO, July 16th, 1890.

To the Rev. J. Frederick Burt, West Hill Parsonage:

REV'D AND DEAR SIR,—We, the church-wardens, sidesmen, members and friends of the congregation of Christ Church learning of your removal from our midst to labor in another part of God's vineyard, to which you have been appointed by the Lord Bishop of Toronto, cannot allow you and your family to leave us without presenting you with some small token of esteem for your ever zealous and untiring labors in our congregation for six years.

We therefore ask you to accept this purse of money as a token of the esteem in which you are held by the members of this congregation and friends in general.

We would not allow the present occasion to pass without remembering Mrs Burt and her great friendliness in going in and out amongst us, with the members of your family, especially your son, Mr. W. Burt, who has done much, and has always been ready and willing to help on the cause to which he intends to devote his life, and may God's blessing rest upon his labors. We cannot but sincerely thank the Misses Burt for all their kindness, and ready help on many occasions, and cannot but feel that the gap made by your removal will be long unfilled, at all events in our hearts.

In conclusion our earnest desire is that in your new field of labor you and your family may be spared many years to carry on the good work for which we have always found you so zealous to promote, not only in our congregation but in other congregations around us, thus causing a spirit of good feeling to exist among the different denominations in our midst. And when your labors here on earth are ended may you hear our divine Master's greeting, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of our Lord;" is the heartfelt wish for yourself and family of the undersigned.

Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Z. Knights, Mr. and Mrs. F. Wheeler, Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Annis, Mr. and Mrs. W. Helliwell, Mr. and Mrs. M. Willis and over sixty others.

Again another friendly scene. The Empire says:—"On Tuesday last, Christ Church parsonage, another agreeable surprise party. The L. O. L. No. 164 having learned of the departure of Rev. F. Burt to West Mono, mustered at their hall and marched the parsonage to present the reverend gentleman with an address and a valuable and beautiful gold-headed cane, engraved with the initials of the Lodge. Accepting the mark of fraternal regard and respect the Rev. Mr Burt made a suitable reply. Short speeches by Mr. J. P. Wheeler, G. Camps, T. Howlett and H. T. Helliwell followed, when improvised refreshments were partaken of after which the party sang the National Anthem. Then commendatory prayer, and the Lodge bade farewell according to the custom of their Order."

THE GOSSIP OF A WEEK.

SOME INTERESTING NEWS AND CURRENT TOPICS.

Political Pointers—Latest Works Started—Terrible Cyclone in Ontario—The loss of the Steamer Idaho—Election Petitions—General Middleton's Inventions.

TORONTO, July 30.—This last week has been crowded to overflowing with Provincials. I am captured by uniformed corps of Oddfellows. A gala time has been had by them and many competitions were held, the prizes all of which were very valuable, being awarded as follows:—Drill, first prize Niagara, N. Y.; second, St. Thomas, Ont.; third, Ottawa. Ottawa secured the prize for the largest under and Canton on parade, and St. Thomas, the prize for the Canton coming the long at distance.

Another bad storm passed over the country last week, and did a deal of amount of damage. These storms seem to be worse than we have not had some sort of storm. Rain in a perfect deluge, thunder, lightning, hail and small cyclones have devasted miles of farm land in Western Ontario. Despatches state that the hail stones were as large as pigeons' eggs. Wheat and oats have suffered greatly. Whole fields have been laid low and stripped. Several houses and barns have been reported as blown down, and near Hamilton a barn was carried into and into a neighbor's farmyard. Fruit trees and vegetables have also suffered heavily. Where the cyclone struck and will, there is nothing promising in way, miles and miles of property have been destroyed. Into what it is stated was the small or been portion of the cyclone which has created such a furore in the Eastern States and Montreal cities, there fall yet are some, which have been laid, hundreds of those houses and buildings have been after the cyclone had over a hundred thousand dollars worth of damage in Hamilton. Toronto, on all sides at the usual year for such and with the Hamilton have received the brunt of them, Canada has suffered a great deal.

Things generally have been pretty quiet in political circles. The twenty-fifth petition against the election of members to the Ontario Assembly has been filed here. It is against the election of A. F. Campbell in East Algoma. Mr. Campbell is a straight Equal Rights, who got elected on that issue. The petitioning seems to work both ways, for another stream of petitions is flowing in against Mr. Dingman, M.P.P., North Bruce, and against which a petition was filed some days ago. Mr. Dingman is a Conservative, and the opposition in the election, Thomas Marton. If this sort of thing goes on, the whole legislature will be petitioned against, and a new election will be in order.

The newly made up Cabinet held their first meeting in Brockville last week, but did not do much business.

Much attention is received in Montreal over the loss of the steamship Idaho in Anticosti. Some of the report is really in various circumstances. Idaho is the chartered per steamer in Allan's cargo was twenty two thousand sheep, valued at $27,000, and some half of 40,000 bushels of grain. All the crew of some 30 head of cattle and sheep. All this is a total loss. The Idaho is a steamer of 1,600 tons, valued at $75,000. Some circumstances of a warehouse day the Dominion line from Liverpool, who was her owner. England is bad ladies.

An instance of longevity comes from Parry Harbor. Mrs. Hutchinson just received her 100th year. A Chinese the neighbors in very grand and wonderful gathering and celebrations for such were, and carried her for wood in her back a distance of half a mile and is as strong as ever at 50 years. She has been twice married, but has survived both her husbands and all her children.

The court sessions. M. Pitts and others are greatly interested in the successor to the late John Page, chief engineer of the Dominion. Prominent name in mind are those of Walter Shanly, Cunningham, Schanzer, Thomas Keefer, and others. Mr. Shanly is the oldest man of the service and is the most competent. One man, and it is to be hard work, is W. G. Thompson, C. E. now in charge of the Lake Superior canal, and a trained assistant of Mr. Page's chief.

The appointment to the position has led to Governor's Island Middleton's name is much speculation in military circles. It is now stated from Ottawa that Col. Walker Powell, the Dominion's very efficient Adjutant-General will resign his office. Name will be prominently mentioned as Col. Charles Robertson, of the Horse Guards, and Major-General H. Smith, who formerly a Royal Military College.

Adam Brown, M.P., the big Hamilton manufacturer, visited Rideau Hall Rideau lately in relation to anti-pigeon shooting. Had every sympathy from appointed Canadian Commissioner at the Jamaica Exhibition. He is communicating with the various Boards of Trade throughout the Dominion and is collecting all the information about the exhibition and the Canadian exhibit can be possible.

Great preparations are being made for the Toronto Industrial Fair, which is about will be held in September. The new features are principally exhibits from Spain and the West Indies and an International dog show.

The Canadian Rifemen are doing well at Bisley as the new Wimbledon is called. They were beaten in the Kolapore Cup match, but took second place in a trophy which amounted to $400. In another the team which numbers twenty, scored 1,800 out of a possible 2,000 and carried off the cup. On the other hand the Dominion can be proud of her riflemen who are drawing well to the front. In the Corporation of London one of the team had everything their own way and won nearly all the best prizes. The chief prize winner so far have been Pte. Hughes on Grand Duke, Ottawa, Lieut. Smith, St. John's rifles, and Sergeant Ogle, Toronto; Capt. Bishop, Pte. Major Gardner, Halifax; Pte. Hare, Kingston; Capt. Gray, Toronto, Ottawa, Sergt. Hall, 20th Waterloo; Sergt. Hanson, 63rd; St. John; Capt. Rutland, 7th Victoria; Pte. Wyndall, 60th Brockville; Pte. Dawes, 13th Grenadiers, Corp. Harris, 13th Hamilton.

The export trade of Canada, reached $92,280,000 last year, an increase of $3,000,000 over the previous year. This is the best showing since 1886.

A new cable is being laid by the Dominion Government to Anticosti, on the gulf of St. Lawrence. Superintendent of Government Telegraphs Gisborne is directing the work.

Whiskey is going up. There has been a concentrated movement in Toronto to change the duties per gallon on whiskey and over the bar. No doubt if there is any strength in this movement it will spread to the country and

One Hundred and Thirty-five Men Reported Killed—Mr. Chaplin's Charges Against United States Cattle—Cholera Epidemic in Mecca—Russia's Crops.

LONDON, July 29.—Mr. Chaplin, President of the Board of Agriculture, replying to questions in the House of Commons today, declined in the absence of authoritative proof to consider the United States free from pleuro-pneumonia. He said that within a short time animals suffering from the disease have arrived at Liverpool from New York.

Caprivi's African Memorandum.

BERLIN, July 29.—The Reichsanzeiger today published Chancellor Von Caprivi's memorandum of the Anglo-German agreement relative to territory in Africa. It begins by stating that the German Colonial policy coming in contact with English schemes caused disagreeable complications. As negotiations on single points did not avail to complete a settlement, it was decided to deal with the disputes from one standpoint. After giving a retail the grounds for the concessions in Africa made by Germany to England the memorandum concludes by insisting upon the value of Heligoland, in view of the national sentiment in regard to the island and of the island's military importance. When the island is occupied by Germany it will be difficult for an enemy to blockade the north-east coast of the empire, and its possession will give more power in the north and render it easier to defend the Baltic Canal.

LONDON, July 29.—Cholera is epidemic in Mecca. There have been 15 cases, seven of which were fatal.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 29.—An official report states that the wheat harvest in the southwest provinces of Russia shows deterioration in quality. The prospects for summer and winter cereals in other districts are very good.

Four Hundred Rioters Arrested.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 29.—Four hundred of the Armenians who took part in the riotous demonstration against the Patriarch in the Armenian Cathedral Sunday have been arrested.

The condition of affairs in Armenia, the Turkish Province in Asia on the borders of the Black Sea, touching the Russian possessions, now resembles that in Bulgaria during the period of the atrocities. In Erzeroum, where recently a hundred Christians were slain in the church, a state of panic prevails, owing to the threatening attitude of the Mussulman population and the excesses of the troops. Hardly a day passes, says a correspondent, but wounded persons are brought in from the surrounding districts. In Erzeroum itself persons disappear and no one knows whither, and dead bodies are constantly found within and without the walls. During the riots a hundred persons disappeared mostly women, who were at the public baths, and are supposed to have been abducted by Mussulmans. The number of wounded is reported at 600, most of them having bayonet thrusts. The predamation of the Armenian Church at the time by the troops rankles in the minds of all the Christians. The Porte has threatened to proclaim martial law in Armenia. The general opinion is that if this is done Christian Armenians will be mercilessly crushed and their cause irretrievably lost. At the back of the Armenians stands Russia, as she did in Bulgaria in 1875.

The Patriarch of the Armenian Church, Monseigneur Nerses, who was mobbed, resides officially at Constantinople, and has the duty of devising measures for the protection of his people. He says that in six Asiatic vilayets—namely, Erzeroum, Van, Sivas, Karjaut, Diarbekir and Aleppo the Armenians number altogether 700,000.

HIS MARRIAGE NOT VOID.

Kleptomania Is Not Sufficient Ground for a Divorce.

ST. PAUL, July 29. Among the decisions handed down by the Supreme Court Judges this week was one of peculiar interest to husbands anxious to be divorced. It is in the case of John M Lewis of St. Paul, who applied some time ago for a divorce from his wife, Rita E. Lewis, on the ground that she concealed from him at the time of their marriage in 1882 the fact that she was a kleptomaniac. The husband claimed to discover that she was so afflicted in 1888 when he went his wife to an asylum in New York State. He then applied to the courts for a divorce, and neither in the lower courts nor in the Supreme Court did the defendant's wife appear. The lower court granted the case, and the husband then took the application to the Supreme Court. Judge Vanderburgh in his opinion says:

The plaintiff applies for a decree of nullity on the ground of his wife's concealment at the time of his marriage of which he claims to have then had no knowledge. The particular form of insanity alleged was a mental propensity on the part of the wife to steal from neighbors and acquaintances. It was not proved nor claimed in the court that she was not otherwise sane or that her mind was affected by this peculiar propensity so as to incapacitate her from understanding or assenting to the marriage contract.

Whether the subjection of the will to a course of uncontrollable impulse or irrepressible passion in one mentally competent to discharge all the duties of a married woman, or to give a sane assent to the marriage contract, amounts to insanity or not we do not see, as long as the understanding and reason remain entirely unaffected and undisturbed, that the afflicted person is not competent of the nature and obligation of a contract entered into to form or have affirmed the same to be void. The authorities, also, are against avoiding the contract. Any other rule would open the door to great abuses. Among cases in point see Georgetown v. Butterfield, 50 Me. 52; Durham v. Durham, 10 Pick. and Dry. 90.

Other authorities are cited where contracts and wills have been upheld by the courts, though the party executing the same was found subject to some peculiar form of insanity or delusions.

The defendant is found to have been subject to kleptomania at the time of her marriage in 1882, but the plaintiff did not discover the fact until 1888. The plaintiff contends that such concealment constituted a case of fraud, and that the court should declare the contract of marriage void on that ground.

"AGE CANNOT WITHER HER," remarked an old gentleman, as he gazed fondly upon the comely little woman by his side; "but frankly," he continued, "as one time I was afraid cosmetics would. The silly little woman, in order to appear youthful, plastered her face with different varieties of whitewash, rouge, balms, 'creams,' 'lotions,' etc. "Yes," interrupted the little woman, "I did, until my skin became like parchment and so pimply and coarse." "Well," said the listener, "What do you use now?" "Use," was the reply, "nothing but common sense and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Common sense told me that if my blood was pure, liver active, appetite and digestion good, that the outward woman would take on the hue of health. The 'Discovery' did all those things and actually rejuvenated me." If you would possess a clear, beautiful complexion, free from blotches, pimples, eruptions, yellow spots and roughness, use the "Golden Medical Discovery." It cures Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and Asthma; soothes irritation of the Larynx and Fauces; strengthens the Vocal Organs; allays soreness of the Lungs; prevents Consumption, and, even in advanced stages of that disease, relieves Coughing and induces Sleep. There is no other preparation for diseases of the throat and lungs to be compared with this remedy.

"My wife had a distressing cough, with pains in the side and breast. We tried various medicines, but none did her any good until I put a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which bareured her. A neighbor, Mrs. Glenn, had the measles, and the cough was relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have no hesitation in recommending this to every one afflicted."—Robert Horton, Foreman Headlight, Morrilton, Ark.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years. Last spring I was taken with a violent cough, which threatened to terminate my days. Every one pronounced me in consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effects were magical. I was immediately relieved and continued to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Bullard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by an increased cough which deprived me of sleep and rest. I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief until I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few bottles of this medicine cured me."—Mrs. E. Coburn, 19 Second st., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I do not know of any remedy which will give more speedy relief than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it also invaluable in cases of Whooping Cough."—Ann Lourdes, 1257 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

"Nor do I; now, when I plainly see the miserable position in which I am placed, I agree with you. But, Silvia, we were very much in love; we have been fond of each other since we were little children. We were surely afraid of something happening to part us. Lord Monford made me an offer, and my parents seemed so anxious for me to accept it, while his father wanted him to marry some cousin. The only thing we could do, to save us both, was a private marriage. How foolish it was, Silvia?"

"Are you sure it was a proper and legal marriage?" asked Mrs. Rymer.

"Yes; Clifford took care of that. I had received an invitation to spend a few days with a friend, who had a country house at Kew. I went and stayed half a day at Greenwich; we were married at an old church there. All that I remember about it is, that I was surrounded by green trees. We were married properly; there was a license and a ring—even our own names. I do not understand much about such matters, but I do know that no marriage could be more binding than ours."

"Mr. Raymond would be sure to attend to that," said Silvia.

"We parted at the church door," continued Lady Ianthe. "My husband came back to London, and I returned to my friends. We have met in society continually, at our own house, and elsewhere, but we have never had an opportunity of meeting to talk over what we should do over this marriage of ours."

"That is a strange story," interrupted Silvia.

"It was very foolish," said Lady Ianthe; "but I love my husband and I will not say that I regret it."

"See," she continued, drawing the little chain from her neck, and opening the silver bag—"this is my wedding ring. I have never dared to wear it, but I will put it on to-night. I have so often looked at yours and envied you because you wore it."

She little knew why Silvia's lips quivered as she smiled. She slipped the golden ring on the white finger, and looked at it with a loving smile. She bent her head and kissed the ring.

"If I dared but wear it," she said. "It was foolish to put it on, but I do love it so dearly—so very dearly."

Then a sudden shock of memory came over, and she grew pale as death.

"I had forgotten for one half minute," she said—"quite forgotten. Oh, Mrs. Rymer, what am I to do?"

"I dare not take upon myself the responsibility of advising you, but if I were in your place, Lady Ianthe, I should certainly tell the truth."

But Lady Ianthe was so engrossed in thought she did not seem to hear.

THE MUSIC OF HIS CHIN.

I'm a music-loving man,
And would go far to hear
Pat Gilmore or some African,
Whose tones are sweet and clear;
But cavesome from the person who,
Will nevermore begin,
And nevermore will put you through
The music of the chin.

I care not for the old songs,
Though I can get 'em cheap;
Their memory to the past belongs,
So let them idly sleep.
But worse than old songs is the friend
Who seeks your time to win,
And who, when started, will not end
The music of his chin.

I've heard steam whistles, brazen gongs,
And bells of every tone;
I've heard the shouts of maddened throngs
And heard a jackass groan;
I've heard a female lecturer swear
At wicked men and sin;
These are as nought, whene'er I hear
The music of his chin.

Mr. Carpenter—"that was a nice slip of the tongue you made introducing me to those young ladies as Mr. Carter." Mr. Tom Bigboe—"Well, I should call it a slip of the pen."

Party Politics.

WHEN party politics run high bad feeling and bad blood are often caused, but all parties agree that when bad blood arises from ordinary causes the only satisfactory cure is Burdock Blood Bitters, nature's blood purifier. Recommended by the medical profession.

A vain regret—that you cannot dress as well as your neighbor.

A Child Saved.

My little boy was taken very bad with diarrhœa, he was very delicate and got so low we had no hope of his life, but a lady friend recommended Dr. Fowler's extract of Wild Strawberry, and although he could only bear a few drops at a time he got well. It saved my child.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Travellers and Emigrants—Those who cross the seas change the climate, but they do not change the constitution. The altered conditions of life, the exigencies of travel and other causes render the traveller and emigrant peculiarly liable to diseases and accidents when far from efficient medical aid. With these associated remedies at hand they may be said to have a physician always at their call, and they may be certain that situations will be constantly arising in which they will require a ready resource in time of need. ## ELOPED TWICE IN A WEEK.

Fred Flagg Gets His Sixteen-Year Old Bride at Last.

PLAINFIELD, Conn., July 18.—Willimantic is a quiet little factory village in the northern part of Windham county that has been considerably stirred up the past week over a sensational elopement. Frederick F. Flagg, a lad eighteen, for about a year past has been paying close attention to Miss Georgiana Lussier, a sixteen year-old factory girl. Georgiana was fond of fine feathers, and hinted to her swain that her previous beaux made her many presents. Fred went to his father and eloquently pushed his claims for more cash. The father refused to increase the pin money of his son, whereupon that young man formed a plan to run away from home. He talked to his sweetheart and she decided to go with him, and on Monday night Fred went to the Lussier homestead, where Georgiana, in the time honoured way, joined him with a little bundle containing her, treasures and the pair started for Danielsonville, where they took a train for Plainfield.

At half past eight, just as the train left the depot, the father and the brother of the girl and the father of the youth arrived at Danielsonville, and finding their efforts to stop the train fruitless they visited the office of Arthur G. Bill, and he promptly wired Plainfield for Sheriff Nathaniel G. Thompson to stop the runaways.

Just as young Frederick was purchasing tickets for Arcotic, R. I., where the marriage was to take place, the Sheriff arrested both of them and returned them to their people in Danielsonville. The party visited Lawyer Bill's office, and after consultation the parents agreed that the pair might be married January 1, 1892, and they all returned home. The young lovers were not satisfied, and decided to make another try at elopement. The arrangements were more perfectly made this time, and nothing seemed to be able to thwart their plans, when the girl's brother found out the whole scheme, and it was frustrated.

Another consultation of the family was held last evening, which resulted in a wedding to-day, a license having been properly granted to Frederick Flagg, who this afternoon was united in marriage to the girl of his choice and partner in two elopements in one week.

AN INSANE MAN RUSHED IN FRONT OF A LOCOMOTIVE.

FLINT, Mich., July 19.—Job Dowley, an insane inmate of the Genesee County Poor house, was killed by a Flint & Pere Marquette engine about noon to-day. Dowley who was 88 years of age, had been a county charge for the past three years, and in pleasant weather was staked out for exercise with a strap and rope. To-day, by some means, he loosened himself, and escaped to the railroad track, a half mile distant, and was on his way to the city when seen by Engineer J. R. Waddell. Dowley was some fifteen feet to the side of the track, but, seeing the train, the unfortunate victim threw up his hands, and with a yell dashed upon the track ten feet ahead of the locomotive. An effort was made to stop the train, but it proved useless, and Dowley was caught by the cow catcher and hurled twenty feet in the air. When the cars were stopped the mangled remains were found in a fence corner.

DOGS AND CATS FASCINATED BY A SNAKE.

Mr George Russell lives in a house on the river road opposite Belleville, N. J., a short distance above the Jersey City works. One afternoon last week his wife, Mrs Mary Russell, awoke from a doze on the sofa in the parlor and noticed with some curiosity that the young dogs and a cat, household pets, were standing as if turned into stone, staring at some object in a corner of the room. Looking to see what it was that had apparently paralyzed them, she saw a black snake fully six feet long coiled upon the carpet. The reptile seemed ready to strike, but it was perfectly still, and its eyes, Mrs. Russell says, were protruding at least an inch from their sockets, as it gazed intently at the stupefied animals.

Mrs. Russell jumped from the sofa and endeavored to break the spell that bound the cat and the dogs by striking them with a cloth; but they paid no attention to her, nor did the big snake seem to heed her presence at all. She was alone in the house, and she ran out to call a neighbor. She was absent for about fifteen minutes, and when she returned, unaccompanied by anybody, the situation had not changed a particle. The snake's glittering eyes were still fiercely protruding and neither the cat nor the dogs seemed capable of moving. Then Mrs. Russell went into the kitchen, and, going back with her husband's axe, she chopped off its head. As the reptile fell dead, the animals it had fascinated recovered their motion and moved away.

SUNBEAMS.

A virtuous man is ever in union with nature's works, but he feels mightily out of place in some society.

We never know the full value of anything until we have lost it. This applies especially to baggage smashed in a railway wreck.

In the halcyon days of yore the marriage took place; now the nuptials occur.

He that is slow to anger regretteth not the idiocy incident to a swollen head.

It is strange that when a man goes to have a "blow out" he blows his money in.

It is a mistake to say that rain falls alike on the just and the unjust. The latter always has the umbrella.

"Now," said the tramp who had been laboring at the wood-pile, "I'll go around to the kitchen and see if I can't cash a few of these chips."

Clerk—"How did that moth mixture go that I sold you the other day, sir?" Customer—"Like hot cakes. The moths won't eat anything else."

It is a figment poetic brain that the bravest are the tenderest. If that be true, what a wretched coward, in life that last beefsteak must have been.

No Cause for Worry.—Potter—"I have read in a newspaper that sun is gradually losing its heat. Where is the future heat to come from?" Barnes—"Don't let that trouble you. You will find out before you really care to know."

HE SHOT THE PARROT.

A St. Louis Man Loses His Temper at a Bird's Remark.

ST. LOUIS, MO., July 17.—In the broiling heat of yesterday Charles Robbins was toiling up North Ninth street in no very amiable mood, when a passing remark about the weather caused him to completely lose his temper. This irritability to-day cost him $20 in the police court. Considering the nature of the offence Mr. Robbins may congratulate himself in getting off so cheaply, for by his act a once happy Ninth street family is now plunged in grief, and a Ninth street shopkeeper is obliged to pocket a considerable financial loss.

Robbins was trudging along mopping his perspiring brow, when he heard a voice calling as him:

"Hi there, you blue eyed monster, is this hot enough for you?"

Robbins looked up in a rage and saw a beautiful poll parrot with his head cocked to one side waiting for a reply. He whipped out a revolver and at the first shot killed the bird. The next went wide of the mark and crashed into a $75 plate-glass window below. A policeman was among the first of the big crowd that gathered round the testy Robbins, and he was soon disarmed and locked up.

THE DEAR LITTLE WIFE AT HOME.

The dear little wife at home, John,
With ever so much to do,
Stitches to set, and babies to pet,
And so many thoughts of you;
The beautiful household fairy
Filling your heart with light;
Whatever you meet to-day, John,
Go cheerily home to-night.

For though you are worn and weary,
You needn't be cross or curt;
There words like darts to gentle hearts,
There are words that wound and hurt.
With the key in the latch at home, John,
Drop the trouble out of sight;
To the little wife who is waiting,
Go cheerily home to-night.

A BRAVE WOMAN.

How a Mother Risked Her Life at Alexandria Bay to Save Her Son.

BROCKVILLE, July 22.—One of the most heroic acts and perhaps one of the narrowest escapes from a double drowning occurred about two miles from Alexandria Bay, up the river. A young son of Jonathan Bolton was fishing from a bluff of rocks near Lachie's point, and while endeavoring to land a fish was thrown into the river some four feet below, where the water is about thirty feet deep. Young Bolton's mother was near by at the time, and seeing her son sink beneath the water, immediately threw herself into the river, intending to rescue her drowning boy. She was also unable to swim and soon sank beneath the water, but when she came to the surface of the water she was holding her son in her arms. Mrs. Bolton made another desperate attempt to keep above the water, but to no avail. William Comstock, an Alexandria Bay carsman who happened to be in the vicinity, seeing the frantic woman, hastily rowed to the scene of the accident. It was impossible to quiet the woman, although nearly exhausted, but Boatman Comstock nevertheless succeeded in catching the drowning pair and kept them above water while the party in the skiff paddled ashore. Mrs. Bolton is the wife of John Bolton, captain of Hayden's private steamer W. B.

Emancipation Day at Berlin.

BERLIN, July 22.—The annual celebration of the emancipation of the slaves of the West Indies will be held at Berlin this year on July 31 and Aug. 1. Extensive preparations are being made both by the colored people and the citizens to make it a grand success. Among the features is a colored band tournament for which large prizes are offered. Between $300 and $600 is offered alone for athletic sports.

On the second day a monster parade of colored people is to take place, consisting of all the banks, ex-slaves and colored societies. Reduced rates on all railroads have been secured. It is expected there will be fully 10,000 colored people present, besides the large number of white people who attend these celebrations. The colored people have chosen a delightful town in which to hold their celebration, and Berlin is second to none for amusement.

Lost an Ounce of Brain, Yet Lives.

FORT DODGE, Ia., July 22.—Willie Eberhart, a nine-year-old boy living here, is getting along with an ounce less brains than he had a week ago. Willie had his skull caved in by an accident at a mud-crusher a week ago. One side of his head was crushed like an eggshell, leaving the brain protruding in places. Although it was thought the boy could not live an hour the wound was dressed and a portion of the brain weighing an ounce was taken out. The bones were placed back in position and have knitted nicely. To-day the child is out of danger and, the surgeons say, is sure to recover.

AN ANGEL OF MERCY.

Miss Fanny Gary's Noble Act of Self-sacrifice.

CHICAGO, July 22.—Miss Fanny Gary, the talented daughter of Judge Joseph E. Gary, has worked for two weeks in a Division-street tailor shop and has proved herself a worthy member of the Girls' Friendly Society of St. James' Church.

It was several years ago that Jens Anderson deserted his wife and children, leaving them penniless in the worst quarter of Milton-avenue. The day soon came when there was no food in the house and starvation stared the inmates in the face. Death was hovering near when a knock came at the door and Miss Gary entered. With the aid of her associates she soon saw that there was plenty to eat and to wear for the inmates of the little home. The two girls Mathilde and Mary were secured positions in a tailor shop, and work was also provided for the mother. Miss Gary never lost sight of her charges, and three weeks ago she noticed that the hard work and long hours were telling on Mary Anderson. So she offered to send her to a pretty resort on Lake Wisconsin.

"I can't go," sobbed the girl, who is only 15 years of age, when she called at Miss Gary's home a few days later. "The boss tailor will not allow me leave unless I find some one to take my place, and I can't find anybody."

Miss Gary thought a moment, then said: "You go and enjoy yourself, and I will see that your place is taken."

Mary left, and the next morning as the train was speeding the little worker westward, Miss Gary, clad in a plain black gown, entered the tailor shop and announced that she had come to take Mary Anderson's place. All that day she stitched away at the coarse cloth, and on every morning for two weeks she was at her self-appointed task. Leaving her father's home at 6 in the morning, she did not return until 7, and it was not until Mary Anderson returned that it was learned that Judge Gary's daughter had worked for two weeks in a tailor shop.

Frightful results have followed the cyclones which raged in various places on the continent, last week. Large tracts of country have been devastated, thousands of horses, cattle and other animals have been killed, crops have been ruined, buildings wrecked and other damage has been inflicted which it will take months to repair. Accompanying the storm in many cases were terrific flashes of lightning, the effects of which were fatal to human life in several places. At Auxonne, France, the barracks were struck and five soldiers were killed. At Pavaia, Italy, a bolt descended upon a church during the performance of divine service, killing two priests, who were officiating at the altar, and stunning a number of the congregation. At Zwickau, Bohemia, lightning struck a dwelling house, prostrating the occupants and setting fire to the building. The house was totally consumed and the entire family of six persons were burned with it.

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng these wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle.

A DANGER SIGNAL!
A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not be an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.
Alex. Burns, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symtoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the droppings into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.
T. D. D. Loyd, 8 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the wonderful healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years in which the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them. till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have purchased myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shall not fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.
NASAL BALM
INSTANTLY RELIEVES
Cold in the Head.
A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.
L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.
NASAL BALM
POSITIVELY CURES
CATARRH.
D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my own case it effected relief from the first application.
Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co., Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect satisfaction of any medicine I ever used for Catarrh in the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of weeks.
If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cent for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

THE BELL OF JUSTICE.

Once on a time an upright king
Hung in the market place a bell
Which all who were oppressed might ring,
And thus their wrongs and sorrows tell;
Receive the justice which they needed,
And all the rights the law conceded.

Now then, with constant calls and time,
The rope had nearly worn away,
They tied the tendril of a vine
To stop the progress of decay,
And give to all who might require
The justice which should never expire.

One day a poor old wretched horse,
Deserted in declining age
Had munched and pulled the hanging vine,
Attempting hunger to assuage;
And ringing thus the justice bell,
Proclaimed the wrongs he could not tell.

Before the king the courtiers brought
The hungry and neglected steed,
He ruled his owner should be sought
And forced to keep him in his need—
Thus justice should protect the least,
And reign alike on man and beast.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

LADY IANTHE'S FOREBODINGS.

"SILVIA," continued Lady Ianthe, raising her eyes to her young companion's face. "Silvia, you must grant me one favor; you must see my husband for me."

Silvia shrunk, with a scared expression on her beautiful face.

"I! Oh, Lady Ianthe!" Then she paused for half a minute. "I will do anything for you," she answered. "I will see him if you wish."

"After to-night," said the young girl, "mamma's suspicions will most surely be aroused. She will watch me closely; she will not like to leave the house without her. I know she will watch the letter-bag, so that I shall find it difficult to send a letter; yet I must communicate with him at once. He seemed more anxious than myself that all publicity should be carefully guarded against; that all chances of our secret being made known should be most urgently dreaded. Indeed," she continued, with a smile, "to show you what foolish children we were, we took an oath of secrecy to each other, so that neither of us can break it. It seems to me the time has come when that oath must be broken."

"I quite agree with you," said Silvia. "There is no further use in concealing the truth—it must be told."

"My husband must be told all that has passed," continued Lady Ianthe; "and we must arrange together what is to be done. Oh, Silvia, it will be a terrible blow to my dear mother—a most terrible blow!

"It will not be the simple announcement of the marriage that will grieve them so," said Lady Ianthe; "it will be the terrible ruin that must follow. Oh, Silvia! if I could but avert it. I feel now that I would give my whole life to help them."

"We must hope for the best," said Silvia.

She was obliged to take refuge in platitudes, for she was quite at a loss what to say.

"You must go," continued Lady Ianthe, "If you will, Silvia, to my husband's rooms, take a letter to him, and wait for an answer. You will not mind doing this for my sake, will you?"

"No," was the earnest reply. "Command me just as you will, for your sake I would do anything on earth."

"Then I will write my letter now, late as it is, before I go to sleep; and in the morning, before any arrangements can be made for the day, you can ask Lady Leeson for permission to go out; she will think it is for some private business of your own, and will not say one word."

"I will do that," said Silvia; "but, Lady Ianthe, are you not too tired for writing to-night?"

Lady Ianthe's eyes were bright as day.

"Tired," she said, with a low, bitter laugh; "I have a terrible feeling over me, Silvia, that I shall never be tired again. I cannot explain it. A fever of unrest—a foreboding—what can it be? It seems to me that I shall never know rest, or peace, or quiet again. I have heard of some terrible feeling coming to people before death; have you?"

"Do not say such terrible things," said Silvia; yet, as she spoke, a cold shiver seized her. "Dear Lady Ianthe," she said, "do not talk of death—you are so young yet, with such a happy life before you."

"I do not think so. It seems to me that I am in such sore straits, nothing but death can help me. Look which way I may, there lies on either side nothing but misery."

"You will not be miserable with Mr. Raymond," said Silvia. "You will forget this trouble when you have been a happy wife for some time."

Lady Ianthe's face took that sorrowful expression that was yet so tender.

"Every time I look at my husband," she said, "I am afraid I shall remember that for his sake I broke my mother's heart. It will break her heart, Silvia, to lose all the prestige of rank and position."

"There will always be one source of comfort for you," said Silvia; "come what may, you will have your husband's love to depend upon."

"I shall have that," said Lady Ianthe, "and I shall have nothing else. I shall be like a man who crosses a steep precipice, beneath which rages a boiling torrent, and has a slender plank to cross on; that plank is to me my husband's love. Should it fail me, oh, great Heaven! should it fail me, there is nothing to save me from the dark waters; and, Silvia, Silvia, I should be swept away in them. I can hear the rush of the torrent now!"

Silvia was almost frightened at the young girl's agitation.

"You are sure of it," she said, earnestly; "you must be sure of your husband's love as you are of Heaven."

"Of course I am. You see, Silvia, I am unnerved—quite unnerved. Why else should I doubt him who has ever been so kind, so loving, so true to me? I do not doubt him. I was mad when I said that. I do not doubt him; it was only a cruel, terrible, nervous fear."

Yet, though she spoke so bravely, though it seemed to her there could be no cause for fear, Silvia could not help thinking that some terrible doubt was eating her heart away.

The little clock upon the mantel piece struck three. Lady Ianthe rose hastily.

"How unpardonably wrong of me," she said, "to keep you up so long. Do forgive me, Silvia. Selfish sorrow makes us."

"Let me go to your room with you," said Silvia, "you ought not to be left alone."

"No, I thank you. I will write my letter. My heart beats, my pulse is throbbing until it pains me; writing that letter will give me rest and do me good."

The earl's proud daughter clasped her arms round Silvia's neck; she bowed her beautiful head on hers.

"You are another plank, Silvia," she said, gently, "but not strong enough to save me from destruction.

With these words—sad, hopeless, almost despairing, she quitted the room, and Silvia remained alone to meditate on this problem of life. The world, after all, was the same, everywhere the same. In Cleve House she had begun to think that if a woman only married a man who was kind to her, fond of her, and patient with her, no more was needed for a life's happiness. Now she saw Lady Ianthe married—secretly, it is true—to a man she loved. Did happiness result from it? No; nothing could possibly result from it but misery and disgrace.

What did bring happiness? Not money, not rank, not position, not love—she had seen all fail. Her face grew grave and solemn; nothing, it seemed, of worldly origin—nothing of earth.

"And I used to think when I was a girl that every one was born to be happy, purposely to be happy, and for no other reason on earth. I have not been happy myself, only for a few short months. Who is happy?"

There came to her then, perhaps for the first time in her life, a sensation of longing for that bright, beautiful home above, where no sorrow and care ever enter—the heaven that rewards a good life and crowns duty.

She was only young, and had suffered deeply; her heart had been wrung with anguish of betrayed love; the fair name and womanly purity that had been her pride, the crown of her girlhood, had been rudely torn from her and dragged in the dust. There was no hope left for her on earth. Her dreams of love, of happiness, of peace and honor, were all most cruelly ended; life blighted, hope betrayed and dead, were all that remained to her. But, as she stood there in the silence of night, for the first time there came to her what seemed like a revelation—a longing for the better home, where no sin, no sorrow, no shame ever enter.

Silvia slept little that night; morning had dawned long before she closed her eyes, and then the dreams that came to her of Lady Ianthe were most terrible ones.

She did not like the task that lay before her. True, Mr. Clifford Raymond was very handsome, very accomplished, a man to touch any woman's heart, and win love; but she did not like him. It might be that she was prejudiced against him; but there was a weakness, a want of resolution, a kind of moral cowardice in his face that she did not like. Yet she had promised, and she must keep her word. It was still early in the morning when Lady Ianthe opened her door. Silvia was almost shocked to find that she still wore her evening dress and jewels.

"You have not rested at all, Lady Ianthe," she said.

"No; but I have written my fever all away. See, my hands are cold. I do not think I shall ever be warm again. You, see the address, Silvia. My husband always keeps those rooms. When his family are in town, then he stays with them. Take a cab, and drive straight to Grosvenor Street; go early, that you may see him before he leaves home, and, oh, Silvia! remember my suspense, dear; it will be most terrible."

"I will do all that love and sympathy can do," she said. "I will send to Lady Leeson at once."

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

A DEATH-WARRANT.

"Mrs. Rymer wants to go out," repeated Lady Leeson when her maid delivered the message. "I suppose I must say 'yes' but really it is very annoying. Did she say how long she wished to be absent?"

"Until noon, I understood, my lady," replied the maid, who did not look upon Mrs. Rymer in any favorable light.

"Tell Mrs. Rymer that I hope she will not be later," and Lady Leeson turned, with a sigh, on her pillow.

In the present state of affairs she was learning to trust Mrs. Rymer above any one else. She had thought of rising and having a long talk with her, telling her all that had passed between Lady Ianthe and herself, taking counsel with her; but if she were going out, all those plans would be quite hopeless, quite in vain.

Silvia dressed herself, and in her plain morning attire her delicate, graceful beauty showed to such advantage that she was almost ashamed of herself. No girlish emotion of happiness gladdened her heart, no thrill of delight at her beauty, no exultant feeling of joy that Heaven had made her so fair, came over her; she was more than ashamed of her loveliness and something like afraid.

With the letter securely clasped in her hand, she walked to the nearest cab-stand, and was soon on her way to Grosvenor Street. The cab stopped at No. 39, and with a beating heart Silvia saw the house where Lady Ianthe's husband lived.

She asked for Mr. Raymond, and was told that that gentleman was yet not visible.

"I will wait for him," said Silvia.

"My business with him is very important."

She saw the mistress of the house making a grimace very suggestive of disapproval; but she knew that she must not mind trifles.

"Shall I say any name?" asked rather a pert looking maid.

"No, I thank you," replied Silvia, with quiet dignity. "I am quite a stranger to Mr. Raymond; he would not know my name."

Then the landlady's face cleared.

"You had better go into the breakfast room," she said. "Mr. Raymond will not be long now."

Before long the door opened, and Lady Ianthe's husband entered. He recognized Silvia at once, and went up to her with outstretched hands.

"Mrs. Rymer," he cried, "I never dreamed of seeing you. They told me a lady, but I felt sure it was only a subscription for a charity, or something of that kind."

Then a sudden alarm came over him, as he saw Silvia's grave face. "There is nothing wrong with Lady Ianthe?"

"There is nothing wrong," she replied. "I merely wanted to see you on business. You have not taken breakfast yet, Mr. Raymond?"

"No," he replied. "I was late last evening, but I could not think of detaining you, Mrs. Rymer."

"Take my advice," she said, "and drink some chocolate. I may detain you some little time."

She was charitable enough to remember that, in all probability, the letter she had with her would completely destroy all his chance of appetite.

She sat still while he drank the chocolate, and the more she looked at the handsome face the more she disliked him.

"Lady Ianthe's good sense must have failed her," Silvia said to herself, "when she intrusted her happiness to one who looks so little trustworthy."

Then Mr. Raymond came over to her. He had been casting very uncomfortable glances in her direction. He drew a chair close to hers, and spoke in a very subdued, uncomfortable voice.

"I can only repeat, Mrs. Rymer," he said, "that I hope there is nothing wrong. You have brought me a communication of some kind from Lady Ianthe; I hope she is well."

"I left her very well, but very anxious," said the young girl. "Lady Ianthe desired me to give you this letter, to wait while you read it, and take back your answer."

He took the letter from her hand, and she noticed how his lips grew pale and twitched nervously.

Silvia looked into the handsome face that was yet so wanting in what to her were the chief charms—power and frankness—then she continued.

"Lady Ianthe bade me say that she has been obliged to take some one into her confidence; therefore she has taken me."

The pallor on his face deepened.

"So, you know all?" he said slowly.

"Yes. Lady Ianthe found herself compelled to trust some one, and she has trusted me."

"Impossible to have made a better choice," he said, with an awkward attempt at gallantry.

Then he unfolded the letter and began to read it. Even Silvia was surprised at its length; there was sheet after sheet of closely written lines. She watched him as he read, and for Lady Ianthe's sake her heart sunk deeper and deeper.

There was no mistaking the expression of that handsome face; there came a lowering frown on the brow, as angry shadow in the eyes, the pale lips worked convulsively. He read to stern silence, then she felt sure that a muttered oath came from between his lips.

He crushed the letter in his hand, he walked restlessly up and down the room then he turned a wild, haggard, face to Mrs Rymer.

"You were to take my answer back," he said.

"So Lady Ianthe wished," she replied briefly.

"I do not know what to say. I am lost, bewildered, it is unexpected, and I was never less prepared. I do not know what answer to send; it is the most unfortunate state of things."

"It is trebly unfortunate for Lady Ianthe," said Silvia, gravely. A great dislike was springing up in her heart for him.

"It is just as I thought," she said to herself, "just as I surmised. He is selfish enough to lead any one into trouble and difficulty, yet meek in emergencies, not to be trusted, and quite unable to help them out."

"I do not know what to do," he said; "I am quite bewildered. I must ask you to wait, Mrs. Rymer, while I think there is no way out of my difficulties, that I can see."

He sat down again and seemed to engross himself in his own thoughts, they were not pleasant ones, as she could tell from the heavy frown, the muttered words, the restless swaying of the whole body. She was too indignant to offer any suggestions.

"Verily," she thought, "the earl's daughter made a strange choice—the man is a coward, afraid of the consequences of his own acts."

And it struck her suddenly how frail was the plank that stood between Lady Ianthe and her destruction—how frail and insecure.

Then Mr. Raymond rose and went to his writing-table. He looked irresolutely at her.

"You are sure Lady Ianthe wanted an answer now?" he said.

"Yes," replied Silvia, "there can be no delay, as doubtless her letters tell you. Some course of action must be decided upon at once."

He turned away impatiently and began to write. When once the letter was begun she could not help seeing how he warmed to the subject. He wrote rapidly, then laying aside sheet after sheet as he finished them, after the fashion of a writer hard at work.

But Silvia, watching him, came to the conclusion that he was sending no comfort to her. He wrote with angry frown, biting his lips, and murmuring to himself the while. When he had finished he gathered up the loose sheets, arranged, folded, and sealed them in an envelope. He gave a great sigh, as one of whose mind is relieved from a heavy burden.

"I do not know how far Lady Ianthe has trusted you, Mrs. Rymer," he said, "but, if you really have her interest at heart, if you are truly her friend, and she tells you the advice I have given her here, you will see that she follows it, you will advise her to do it. It is an unfortunate piece of business altogether, and that is the only way I can see out of it."

As Silvia left the house she thought to herself.

"If girls and women could but see the nature of the men for whom they sacrifice themselves, how they would despise them. Lady Ianthe would give up every earthly hope for him. He seems tired of the whole affair."

Then she began to wonder what was in this packet, what kind of news she was taking home to the young girl who was awaiting it so anxiously. She little knew that it was a death warrant.

When she reached home some visitors were there, just going to luncheon, and Lady Leeson seemed pleased to see her.

"It is long past noon," said Silvia contritely. "I am very sorry, Lady Leeson, but I was most unavoidably detained."

The countess was very gracious.

"Pray do not mention the delay, Mrs. Rymer," she said; "I am pleased to see you back again."

She could not deliver the letter to Lady Ianthe until dinner was over, for there was a constant influx of visitors. But at last she was able to put it into her hands.

SIR JOHN AND HIS TRADUCERS.

(Guelph Herald.)

THE Globe is now busily engaged explaining to the faithful how the great Conservative party is tottering to its fall. It is the old story that has been again and again rehearsed in its columns, and notwithstanding that the fabric has become threadbare it has periodically to do duty. According to the prophecies of our contemporary Sir John Macdonald is soon to pay the debt of nature, and then—then the deluge! One Conservative statesman after another is told to stand up by the Globe, his imaginary weakness as a leader is pointed out, and then he is relegated to the shades of oblivion by the magnanimous editor.

The Globe has for years enjoyed the unenviable reputation of a false prophet, and so long as it pursues its present course, there is absolutely no danger of it losing its prestige on that score. Could anything be more nonsensical than to suppose that the life of a party which has enjoyed the confidence of the people with one single interruption since Confederation, should be snuffed out by the removal of its central figure? The most able men in Canadian politics have rallied around Sir John A. Macdonald, and they see in him the peer of all compeers. But when his race is run, and he is gathered to the ashes of his fathers, there will be found shoulders among his allies on whom his mantle will fall with grace and elegance.

Is it, not, however, premature—is it not in bad taste—for Liberal organs to hurl with acclaim the approach of the Death Reaper, and the removal of one who has always proved worthy of their steel? We cannot look with complacency on such conduct. It shows a total extinction of all the better elements of nature, and places those who indulge in such tactics in the light of the vulture.

When Sir John Macdonald is laid down to rest, Canada will mourn the loss of her most illustrious statesman. His deeds will not die with him, but will shine as a beacon light to future generations. His character is such that his traducers could with profit strive to emulate.

EDITORIAL NOTES

GERMANY celebrated the 500th anniversary of the introduction of the manufacture of paper into that country on June 24. The founder of the industry, which has since proved so profitable to the Fatherland, was Ulman Stromer, of Nuremberg.

IT is proposed to celebrate the opening of the St. Clair Tunnel by a fitting demonstration. It will be an occasion worthy of a celebration. The two shields will undoubtedly meet about Sept. 1st. The first engine and train of cars will pass through in about three months, as there is considerable excavating and masonry work to be done at the approaches.

NOTHING is more previous than the weed. Go into a garden when you will, the weed is there before you. It grows behind your back, whenever you take your eyes from it a moment, and flourishes from the time you hang up the hoe. Sit down and watch it all day, and its bulk will not be augmented in the slightest degree. It remains as unobtrusive as a bashful boy when strange girls are in the house, but the moment you take your eyes from it, it pokes up its head and puts its foot in your pocket. A weed is the most cheerful thing in nature. It is never discouraged. Cut it down if you will. The exercise will benefit you, and do it no harm, but for a time appearances will be improved about your premises.

THE area of Canada, according to the latest estimate of the Interior Department from data supplied by Government surveyors, is 3,519,000 square miles, the land surface being estimated at 3,379,000 square miles. These figures are less than those which have passed current for some years, the estimated area up to last year being 3,610,000 square miles. It must not be supposed, however, that our territory is decreasing. It is of course impossible with such a vast Dominion to give the exact extent of our country, and it is probable that as surveys are made and measurements corrected, all the estimates made for some time to come will vary more or less from one another. Canadians will be satisfied to know that our country consists of one four teenth part of the earth. That the Dominion is nearly thirty times as large as the whole of the United Kingdom, and that Canada is 500,000 square miles larger than the United States, without Alaska.

SINGULAR, IF CORRECT.—Is it correct that bees "swarm" more frequently on Sundays than on any other day of the week? The little busy-bodies are an innocent looking lot; but one who has had much to do with them for many years says that it is one of their peculiarities that five times out of six the new colony will start from the old hive on a Sunday, and if their owner is a particularly strict observer of the Sabbath, and one who dislikes very much to do any work on that day, they'll run in the sixth time as well. This may only be a libel on the bees; but our friend sticks to it as being true, at least as far as his experience goes.

TRANSATLANTIC ADVICES.

SALISBURY CANNOT INTERFERE WITH THE CZAR.

Many Months Parish in the Plague at Mount Athos—The Parnellites to Be Attacked in Their Own Fortresses—Prosecutions Against Cholera.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—In the House of Commons today Sir James Ferguson said the British Government could not interfere with the Czar's treatment of the Jews.

Queen Victoria this evening left Osborne House for a drive to witness the yachts' squadron parade at Cowes. Her carriage had to cross a steam ferry on a pontoon. A hob suddenly letting down of the pontoon on which the carriage stood caused an inrush of water which partially submerged the pontoon. The Queen and the spectators were for a moment panic stricken, but the pontoon soon righted and floated free. The Queen was then conveyed safely to her destination.

To Be Attacked in Their Strongholds.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The Parnellites are going to be attacked in their own fortresses in the south and west of Ireland, which have been left too much in the hands of the Nationalists, and the local patriotic union has now determined to cover Ireland with political organizations directly hostile to the league. The National League will be fought in every district, and it is expected that a large amount of Unionist feeling, now lying suppressed or intimidated, will be called forth. The Parnellites will not be allowed a walk-over at the next election. They are to be attacked in every seat, and it will probably turn out that even in the south and west the Unionist minority will be large.

The Foresters' High Court.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—The High Court of the Order of Foresters has refused to agree to a proposal to expunge the paragraph of the Investigating Committee's report stating that freedom of action having been granted in the matter of graduated contributions to American courts, an obstacle has been removed which has hitherto impeded the progress of the order in America.

The Chief Forester announced that the total membership of the order was 700,000. He also made a statement of the financial condition of the order, showing that the total amount of funds in the various treasuries amounted to £4,850,000.

The Cremation Conference.

PARIS, Aug. 5.—The International Cremation Conference today sent a telegram to Emperor William asking him to excuse the cause of cremation. All the American delegates signed the telegram.

Precautions Against Cholera.

CAIRO, Aug. 5.—The Egyptian Government has adopted the severest measures by quarantine and surveillance to prevent Jeddah pilgrims from bringing cholera into Europe.

Great Mt. Athos Affame.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—Dispatches from Athens announce a most disastrous fire upon the celebrated Mount Athos, the Holy Mountain of the Greek Church. The fire has destroyed the largest part of its wonderful forests. Of the 20 Greek monasteries which have been located upon the mountain for centuries, most have been completely destroyed. The loss is estimated at 5,000,000 francs. Twenty monks and hermits have perished in the flames.

The mountains of the district of Mount Athos, near Salonica, are covered with vast forests of pine, oak and chestnut. They are 6000 feet above the level of the sea, and during the Middle Ages were dotted over with hermitages and monasteries, 20 of which still remain. The monks dwelling in the mountains are said to number about 6000, from Greece, Bulgaria, Roumania and Russia. No females are permitted to enter the peninsula. The monks are ruled by an administrative assembly composed of delegates chosen for a term of four years. Some of the monasteries had rich libraries and old and beautiful manuscripts. Several of the latter have been photographed and deposited in the Museum of Moscow.

An Explanation Demanded.

PARIS, Aug. 5.—It is reported that King Leopold has signed a treaty with Germany securing to the Germans forts on the Meuse as a basis of operations in case of war with France. He called at a store in the village and purchased a knife, then went on to the 21 concession of Blenheim, where he was seen by B. Howes and C. Foster of Princeton. Returning again about 6 p.m. they saw his team standing still on the road, and on reaching it found his team just behind the wagon, dead, the wagon having passed over his arm and chest, breaking the arm and crushing in several ribs.

HE WANTS JUSTICE.

A Bracebridge Man Kept in Jail 72 Hours Without Food or Water.

OTTAWA, Aug. 5.—A man named McCord, who comes from Bracebridge, has been here for the past twelve or three days, waiting to have his case before the Minister of Justice or his deputy. Today he had an interview with Mr. Sedgewick, Deputy Minister of Justice. According to McCord his grievance is a somewhat novel one. He had a dispute with a female relative. Anything but complimentary remarks were exchanged and McCord was brought before a magistrate, charged with abusive language. At any rate the result was that McCord was sent to jail. By some oversight the jailer forgot on about McCord's incarceration, and for three days and three nights the prisoner was left, he says, in his cell without either food or water, and now his visit to Ottawa is to lay this matter before the justice department so that the jailer may be punished. If justice is to be had in this country McCord is determined to have it, for he is undoubtedly erratic in his talk and his statements are therefore given for what they are worth.

OUR HOLIDAY.—We respectfully ask our many readers not to look for THE SUN a week from to day, as we intend to take a day off next week. The office will be open for business, but there will be no issue of the paper. Subscribers should note this fact.

FINED.—On Friday last Mr. C. H. King was fined $5 and costs by Mayor Walsh for not having water running through the race to the former's factory within the time specified by the board of health. We believe Mr King intends to retaliate by compelling the corporation to remove the mouth of the south Broadway drain which empties into the race in question.

ACCIDENT.—While the family of Township Treasurer Henry were returning from church at Camilla to Mono Centre the horses ran away and threw the occupants out of the vehicle. All escaped being seriously hurt except Miss Charlotte, daughter of Mr. Henry, who received a Colles' fracture of the radius. The injured lady was attended by Dr. Henry, and is rapidly recovering.

BANK OF HAMILTON.—The Bank of Hamilton moved into their new quarters last week. The new building is situated on the north side of Broadway, nearly opposite Mill street. FRAUDS.—Several smooth tongued rascals have been "doing" the township of Peel and have succeeded in swindling a great many farmers. ANOTHER VICTORY.—Last Saturday afternoon a lacrosse match was played between an Indian team from the Forks and twelve players picked from the Lansdowns and the Dufferins, mostly from the former, however. The play was a little too much one sided to be interesting, the Orangeville boys taking games when they wanted to. At the expiration of time—two hours—Orangeville had six games to the visitors one, and our boys kindly helped them to that one.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.—A very serious accident befall Mr. Wm. Collins, who resides in Caledon, about three miles from Orangeville, during the rainstorm which raged on Sunday evening. It appears Mr Collins was sitting in the house, when the chimney was struck by lightning. The fluid ran down the chimney to the stove, mutilating the pipes but not damaging the stove. Mr Collins was near the stove at the time and the lightning in some manner was conducted to his shoulder. The shock rendered him insensible and he remained unconscious for some time. An examination revealed that Mr. C. was badly injured. His shoulder and one side of the body was badly burned and a large piece of flesh was torn from his hip. He is recovering.

DEATH.—Mr. John Roberts died on Friday last at the residence of his son-in law, Mr. Wm. J. Gordon, Margaret street. Deceased had for some years been a sufferer from Bright's disease of the kidneys, and was confined to his bed for five weeks. He was a native of Yorkshire, England, and came to Canada over forty years ago. He settled in East Garafraxa, on lot No. 3 con 6 where he resided for about thirty five years. After the death of his wife in 1885 he went to live with his daughter Mrs. Gordon. The deceased had reached the advanced age of seventy-nine years. Two daughters survive him. The daughters are:—Mrs. Wm. J. Gordon, of this town and Mrs. W. Ward, of East Garafraxa. The funeral took place on Sunday to the Town cemetery, and was largely attended showing the esteem in which the deceased gentleman was held by his many friends.

NEARLY HANGED.—On Friday evening last, about 7 o'clock, a daughter of Dr. Cameron with a young lady friend, went out into the garden, and passing through the stable were horrified to find the stable boy, Ira Peters, a lad of about fourteen, hanging in a sitting position by a halter strap, which he had fastened sling fashion, into a ring. He was taken down as quickly as possible, and the Doctor, who had driven out of the stable only a few minutes before, was recalled from his office, and worked with the boy for three hours before consciousness returned. He is now all right again, but seems unable to assign a reason for his strange act, and neither the doctor's family nor his own friends are at all able to account for it. Whether he intended suicide or was only amusing himself, as has been suggested, Ira had a very close call.—Owen Sound Advertiser.

TWENTY MILLS ON THE $

In Orangeville's Rate of Taxation for 1890.—Sun Thousand Five Hundred and Fifty Dollars Spent on the streets up to Date.—A New Board of Health Appointed.—Reeve Lindsay Dangmore Ald. Bailey's R. & B. Report.—Actions Against the Town Threatened.—General Business Done by the Fathers.

The town Fathers held their first regular meeting since the holidays on Monday night. Since the last meeting wonderful changes have been made in side the council-room. Only a few weeks ago the mayor's throne was moved to the eastern end of the room, and the change left the reporters and clerk without a table. Now the clerk sits by the mayor's left hand side and resembles from the get up of the desk a dealer in a faro bank or a lightning ticket-seller for a circus. But the down trodden representatives of the press had no such luck as the clerk. They have heretofore sat inside the railing beside the urbane fathers, but now they are totally hoisted from the midst of the select gentlemen of the town. They are put outside the railing among the crowd of excited ratepayers who attend almost every meeting. The design of their table is simplicity in extreme. It consists of a pine board about six feet long by one and a half feet wide, and is connected with the railing by two small hinges, the whole being supported by two slender braces. The braces also work on the hinge racket and the whole business can be let down. When this is the case nobody would imagine there was such a thing as a press gallery in the chamber.

Well, about this time—8:10—the longed for clerk arrived and the council proceeded to business. Mayor Walsh, Reeve Lindsey, Deputy reeve Endacott, Ald. Youmans, Green, Bailey, King, Ketchum and Gillespie were the members present. Ald. Cobean was away up the lakes and Ald. Pinkney was someplace else.

The minutes of the last two meetings were read and, after being slightly corrected, were adopted.

ACCOUNTS

were read by the mayor from J. McIlroy, $2; Wm. Bailey, $4 12½; Wm. Harkies, $9 87½; John Hambly, $2 25; Geo. Harkies, $1 25; D. McDonald, $18 08; J. Joll & G. Ruadle, $4; THE SUN, $3.50; J. J. Hubbard, $7 50; Mrs. R. Hudson, $6; A. G McKenney, $7.50; Dominion Express Co., $3 55; J. Irwin $25.50; R. Parkin, $6.50; were ordered to be paid. An account of $1 00 was presented by G. F. Hawkins for cement got in the summer of 1886. It was referred to the Finance committee.

Deputy-reeve Island of Mono wrote to the effect that he thought he was overcharged by the Orangeville poundkeeper for eight of his pigs that were "run in." The pigs remained in pound for five days and Signor de Henderson charged him $10, a very high tariff. The deputy-reeve's communication was referred to the T. P. committee.

The board of health resignation was read and accepted.

THREATENED ACTIONS!!!

Mr. Wm. Menary, late weighmaster, communicated to the effect that he claimed damages from the town for taking the weighscales from him. He said his time went one month into the year and he intended to have the scales for the remaining eleven. The T. P. committee will look into the matter.

J. W. Gale informed the council that his horse had been taken out of a private lot and put in pound. The horse did not receive the best of treatment while in pound, and after its release it was seized with an attack of nervous prostration. When the animal was hitched up it ran away and broke a $175 organ. Mr. Gale said he was a new comer to town and wanted to be dealt with squarely, to save trouble he would settle it up on receiving the sum of $25. The Finance committee will cogitate on the case.

H. Haley, per letter, notified the council that he took exception to the manner in which the repairs were done on Church street, nearh is property. He said he would hold the council responsible for damage done by floods in the future. It was referred to the R. & B.

REPORTS.

Ald. Cobean being absent, Ald. King read the charity committee's report. It referred to profitable disposal of the case of the unfortunate Wm. Irwin, who is almost covered with cancerous sores. His brother and his sister provided a ward in the Toronto general hospital for him for two months. The report was adopted.

Ald. Bailey brought down the R. & B. report. It showed that $1550 had already been spent on the roads this season; the Mill street bridge was yet to build and the cost was estimated at $300; estimates on other repairs brought up the amount yet counted to $670. The council went into committee of the whole on the report. Reeve Lindsey attacked the report and Mr. Bailey in a vigorous manner, and for a few moments it looked as if a general battle would take place. The report was amended and adopted.

BY LAWS.

Ald. Youmans introduced a by-law to appoint a board of health. Acting up on the mayor's suggestion, councillors were appointed to the position. Messrs. Bailey, King and Cobean compose the new board.

Ald. Gillespie introduced a by law regarding the watering of the street.

Reeve Lindsey introduced a by law to strike the rate of taxation for the current year. The town has not increased or diminished its debt this year. The rate was struck at 20 mills on the $.

The following amounts are required:

|---|---|
| County rate | $1265 68 |
| C. V. R. Group | 128 00 |
| C. V. R. | 900.00 |
| Town Improvement Deb'rs | 600.00 |
| Stevenson & Graham | 350 00 |
| Sinking fund | 529 86 |
| High School | 900.00 |
| Public School | 4300 00 |
| Gas, Debt int. | 1290.00 |
| Town rate | 5339.56 |

MOTIONS.

The mayor said he had written to the C. P. R. regarding the erection of gates at the railway, but had not received a reply.

A vote of thanks was tendered the retiring board of health.

An attempt was made to elect Messrs. Youmans, Ketchum, Gillespie and Green to the board of health, but none of these gentlemen would consent to act.

The council adjourned at 11 o'clock.

GRAND VALLEY.

(From the Star.)

Mr. Richardson has erected the frame work of the planing mill near to the flour roller mills. It is intended to run the planer by a shaft from the flour mill.

Owing to the unfavorable weather the promenade concert which was to have taken place on Mr. R. Beard's lawn on Wednesday evening was postponed until the evening of August 13th.

Some of the farmers are now engaged cutting their fall wheat. The sample is excellent and some fields will yield abundantly. Where the grain has not been winter killed the yield will be above the average.

Since our last issue several cases have came up for hearing before our J. P.'s. The usual fines with costs have been imposed and the cases dropped into oblivion. When will people learn to obey the law and save the dollars that might be useful to them in other straits?

On Monday Mr. Robert Dixon, while at work with others putting sills on the stone work of Mr. John Dunsmore's barn 7th line, met with a mishap by being thrown off the timber to the ground, the stick falling and striking him. The side of Mr. Dixon's head, his tongue, arm, leg and foot were injured, laying him off work for two or three days. We understand he has again commenced work on raising the building to-day.

Some young men who are in the habit of talking loud, laughing and other misbehaviour outside of the Presbyterian church during service on Sabbath evenings should be made an example of. Some of their names are known and it would be only just to make them public. Their conduct is a great annoyance to both pastor and congregation.

SHELBURNE.

(From the Free Press.)

Miss Alice Harrison is away for six weeks' holidays, which she will spend in the neighborhood of Niagara Falls.

Mr. Chas. B. Hoey leaves here for Toronto next week, where he will look after the interests of the Toronto Street Railway Company as a conductor on a bob tail car. Success!

At Whitfield on Monday of last week Mr. Geo. Tate's team ran away with the mower. Mr. Tate, just a minute before, had been standing directly in front of the cutting bar, consequently he narrowly escaped injury.

All the business men of Shelburne (save one) have signed an agreement to keep their places of business closed on Tuesday next, Aug. 5th, and observe the day as Citizens' Holiday. On that day there will be a union Sunday school excursion to Elora, information regarding which is given in these columns to day.

A two year old son of Mr. James Small, of Melancthon, was playing in a new house in course of erection on Sunday last and fell down cellar, breaking his left arm near the wrist. Dr. Rooney set the broken limb.

It seems to us that the town papers owe an apology to their readers on account of not having reporters at the meetings of the Public School Board. We have no doubt but that the presence of representatives of the press at the trustee meeting held in Secretary Rutherford's office one night last week would have effectually prevented the heated discussion which took place on that occasion. Some of the language used was unparliamentary, to say the least, and it is said that threats of bodily injury were freely made. Another meeting was held last Tuesday evening in the Council Chamber, but the utmost harmony prevailed. A new teacher, in the person of Mrs. L. Lyons, has been engaged at a salary of $275 per annum.

The Russian saloon for tea drinking is an interesting feature of life in Russian cities. The waiters are attired in white from head to foot, with a large black purse at the waist, and are all men. Tea is drank along or with lemon and the sugar eaten from the hand. Even or fifteen cups are not too many for an old tea drinker.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Important for the delicate. It is difficult to determine which is the more trying to the human constitution, the damp, cold days of autumn and winter, or the keen, dry, easterly winds of spring. Throughout the seasons good health may be maintained by occasional doses of Holloway's Pills, which purify the blood and act as wholesome stimulants to the skin, stomach, liver, bowels and kidneys. This celebrated medicine needs but a fair trial to convince the ailing and despondent that it will restore and cheer them without danger, pain, or inconvenience. No family should be without a supply of Holloway's Pills and Ointment, as by a timely recourse to them the first ering function may be reclaimed, suffering may be spared, and life saved.

TORONTO, Aug. 4.—A living illustration of Shakspeare's saw was arranged at the Police Court the other day, if the stories of the witnesses are to be believed. Toronto, Aug. 4.—A living illustration of Shakspeare's saw was arranged at the Police Court the other day, if the stories of the witnesses are to be believed. The woman is Mrs. Annie Pope of 40 Price-street, and her neighbors charge her with being a common scold. The charge is laid under an old act, and read as follows:

Mr. Mayor—Sir, we call the above named woman a common scold and scourge of discord among her quiet and honest neighbors, so that she has become a public nuisance to her neighborhood by her scolding, quarreling, inciting strifes, controversies, quarrels and disputes among Her Majesty's liege people, against the peace of Our Lady the Queen, her Crown and dignity, to the common nuisance of divers of Her Majesty's liege subjects.

About a dozen of the women's neighbors, including Mrs. Jane E. Hunt, Mrs. E. Tench, Mrs. Hall, Mrs. Annie Lawrence, Mrs. George W. Ennsinger, Mrs. Catharine Manning, Misses Tench, Garnett and Ennsinger, testified that from early dawn to dusk she was continually abusing them, making disagreeable remarks about new dresses or hats which the ladies purchased and making herself a nuisance generally. Among the choicest epithets which she was continually discharging like enamed paper from a boy's pop gun, or missile propelling another, were these, "You're a born devil," "a red-headed sinner," "a dirty liar," "I'll smash you with a brick," "I'll break your neck," "If you didn't drink so much beer, you would have more money to go to bargain day."

The evidence was very strong and the Magistrate committed the woman for trial. She was released on bail, her husband furnishing the necessary security.

The punishment for the offence is the treatment of the ducking stool so popular in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

The village of Oustic and neighborhood, situated near Guelph was somewhat excited on Sunday over the flitting of a young couple. It appears that Miss Tillie Burchfield of Eramosa and Mr. Thompson McLellan of Belwood had conceived an affection for each other, the intimacy having grown while the latter was in partnership in the hotel business in Belwood with Miss Tillie's father. The authorities at home, it seems, did not look favorably on the match, and plans were laid for a runaway dash. The young lady on Sunday morning took her accustomed place in the choir of the R. C. Church of Oustic and joined in the devotions. During the service, however, she went out, cleared a low stone fence, ran across a field, called to her lover who was waiting for her on a steep near by, "I'm ready," and the young pair quickly got into the buggy and were off. Her flight was not discovered till service was out and pursuit was made too late for Arthur, but with no avail, and the young coupe are no doubt safely married by this time.

It is generally current belief that Montreal is the dumping ground for the products of vice of the whole province needed any confirmation it would be proved by the figures given in the mortality statistics for last year just published by the Department of Agriculture. That publication shows that in the 12 months ending Dec. 31 last there were 464 deaths of illegitimate children in this city, against 473 in all the rest of the country, a somewhat alarming state of affairs on the face. In Toronto but 35 were reported.

Premier Mowat of Ontario has rejected the claim of $17,000 submitted by the Dominion Government for maintenance of insane lodged in Kingston Penitentiary and who came from the disputed territory adjoining Manitoba, now decided to be within the territorial limits of Ontario.

A highly interesting ceremony took place last week at Lorette, a small village of Montreal. It consisted of a solemn service to inaugurate a monument to Catharine Tegakouita, the first Indian maiden baptized into the Christian faith—in 1656—to consecrate the new Cemetery and to say mass for the repose of the souls of those buried in the old one, as well as for the Christian Brothers school. About sixty priests were present.

It is understood that Archbishop Cleary is negotiating for the sum of $25,000 for the improvement of church property throughout the diocese. The money can be borrowed from a society in Rome at a very low rate of interest, some say as low as 3 per cent.

A sensational scandal is reported in connection with the management of one of the leading asylums of eastern Ontario. Dr. Graves, high physician of the Independent Order of Foresters, having stopped at this place for several days, states that he had his suspicions aroused that the sulphur water supplied to the institution was not the genuine article, and he proceeded to analyze it. The result of the analysis showed that the water was partly sulphur water, but that it was strongly impregnated with carbonated hydrogen gas. He notified the hotel managers of his discovery, and offered to deposit $500 as a guarantee of the correctness of his theory. The hotel people emphatically repudiated the reflection cast upon their establishment, and here the matter rests for the present.

The ambitious city of Hamilton is going to have some distinguished guests for the next few months. The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen have rented a Hamilton villa and will take up their residence there in a few days. The Aberdeen children, Lord Haddo, Hon. Margery Gordon, Hon. Dudley and Hon. Archie Gordon will be governess and two servants have left London on Aug. 8. Lord and Lady Aberdeen follow on the 14th. They are coming to this country for change, quiet and rest, and will not like the attentions which the Hamilton people will try to show them.

That very sensational case—the Boswell murder mystery will soon again be the one topic of conversation. The trial comes off next month, Sept. 16. Applications are already flowing in for tickets of admission to the Court House at Woodstock. Barclay, the man charged with the crime is not weakening, but is as gay as he can be under the circumstances. Working under the just rule that a man is innocent until proven guilty the only prison discipline Barclay is subject to is confinement within jail precincts. His apartments are comfortably furnished, the floors carpeted and pictures adorn the walls. His meals are supplied from the hotel near by. He dresses in excellent taste, wears a diamond ring and pin and carefully waxes his moustache, of which he is very proud. He reads, smokes cigars, converses with visitors and strolls around the court ground. It is run over that he has a trump card to play which will exonerate him from any complicity in the crime. Mrs. Birchall and her sister, Miss Wee Jones are both staying at Woodstock and have many sympathetic friends.

A Child Saved.

My little boy was taken very bad with diarrhea, he was very delicate and got so low we had no hope of his life, but a lady friend recommended Dr. Fowler's extract of Wild Strawberry, and although he could only bear a few drops at a time he got well. It saved my child.

MRS. WM. STEWART, Campbellville, Ont.

Charles Coombs Tennant, the brother of Mrs. Henry M. Stanley, was one of the passengers on the steamship Umbria of the Cunard line, to New York. Mr. Tennant is a tall, good looking young Englishman, about 30 years of age. He was dressed in a light tweed suit with brown gaiter tops and patent leather shoes. A light brown derby hat surmounted his head. Mr. Tennant has dark hair and mustache. A pair of gold rimmed eyeglasses set on his nose. He is in all a typical Englishman. In speaking of Stanley, Mr. Tennant said that at the present time the explorer was very weak, suffering from the jungle fever. He was only able to take liquid food, but when Mr. Tennant last heard from him, which was just previous to his sailing, he was regaining his old strength.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance." —R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for." —R. T. Schmittou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results." —Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel." —Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

Poetry.

WAITING FOR THE BUGLE.

We wait for the bugle, the night dews are cold,
The limbs of the soldiers feel jaded and old,
The field of our bivouac is windy and bare,
There is lead in our joints, there is frost in our hair,
The future is veiled and its fortunes unknown
As we wait with hushed breath till the bugle is blown.

At the sound of that bugle each comrade shall spring
Like an arrow released from the strain of the string;
The courage, the impulse of youth shall come back,
To banish the chill of the drear bivouac,
And sorrows and losses and cares fade away
When that life giving signal proclaims the new day.

Though the bivouac of age may put ice in our veins,
And no fiber of steel in our sinew remains;
Though the commades of yesterday's march are not here,
And the sunlight seems pale and the branches are sear—
Though the sound of our cheering dies down to a moan,
We shall find our lost youth when the bugle is blown.

YOUR BONES.

How many bones in the human face?
Fourteen, when they're all in place.

How many bones in the human head?
Eight, my child, as I've often said.

How many bones in the human ear?
Three in each, and they help to hear.

How many bones in the human spine?
Twenty-six, like a climbing vine.

How many bones in the human chest?
Twenty-four ribs, and two of the rest.

How many bones in the shoulder blade?
Two in each—one before, one behind.

How many bones in the human arm?
They're easy to count and work like a charm.

How many bones in the human wrist?
Eight in each if none are missed.

How many bones in the palm of the hand?
Five in each, with many a band.

How many bones in the fingers ten?
Twenty-eight, and by joints they bend.

How many bones in the human hip?
One in each, like a dish they dip.

How many bones in the human thigh?
One in each, and deep they lie.

How many bones in the human knees?
One in each, the knee-pan please.

How many bones in the ankle strong?
Seven in each, but none are long.

How many bones in the ball of the foot?
Five in each, as the palms were put.

How many bones in the toes, half a score?
Twenty-eight, and there are no more.

And now altogether these many bones fix,
And they count in the body two hundred and six.

THE LADIES SPOKE FRENCH,

Unfortunately Some of Their Fellow Travellers Did Also.

A beautiful example of the sublime faith some people have in the superiority of their attainments over those of the people by whom they are surrounded, and of the confusion which occasionally ensues when it transpires that such faith has been misplaced, was presented in a railway car recently.

A lady and gentleman, the epic-and-gem newness of whose apparel and belongings and the fawnishness of whose courtesy to each other bespoke their freshly wedded state, were speeding along in the express from Boston. At one of the stations they alighted and presently returned accompanied by a young lady, who was evidently the sister of the bride. During their brief absence their places had been taken by newcomers and it was necessary force the party to distribute itself through the car. The sisters genteel a little at being separated by the aisle, and craned their heads across to whisper to each other. They seemed to have a great deal to say. This was proven when they hit upon the happy expedient of conversing in French. From this time they sat comfortably erect and talked across in tones sufficiently loud to be easily heard above the noise of the train. Their French was not that of the salons. It had probably been acquired in the nursery from some voluble bonne. But it proved all-sufficient for the transmission of the most confidential tales of the young wife's brief matrimonial career. It transpired that she was on her wedding journey, and not having seen her sister since the day when she started out in a rainstorm of rice and slippers, she had much to impart, and the participant were thrilling. They talked in the somewhat thin, fine voices which are characteristic of "Down East" maidens, and which penetrate like a child's treble. When an occasional stop was made they were too interested to pause and did not even lower their tones, they felt so sure everybody else in the car could only understand United States. The wife had disclosed the whole history up to the present time when the train came to a stop in the Grand Central Depot. Then in the sudden hush a gentleman and lady who had been sitting near by exchanged a few sentences relative to their luggage and plans and spoke in correct and fluent French. As their accents fell upon the ears of the authors of les confidences the effect was marvellous, and the girls turned and fled like the Assyrian host, leaving their belongings to be collected by the young husband who had understood nothing and seemed wholly mystified.

The Princess of Wales' Gown.

The Princess of Wales, on a recent visit to the Royal Academy at London, was arrayed in a costume that elicited much comment. Here is the description:

"She wore a dress of golden brown summer cloth, her skirt, which was long and arrayed with no fulness in front or at the sides and perfectly straight folded at the back, was bordered all round by a narrow band of black velvet surmounted by a narrow line of similar material edged with gold braid. The bodice was outlined in a corresponding way, and the sleeves were almost flat on the shoulders and finished with cuffs of black velvet and gold braid. She wore a bonnet of velvet with satin surfaced foliage and varied harmonious tints of brown. The short velvet strings were fastened with a diamond pin. A long, black, curled ostrich feather boa completed the princess' costume."

A Handsome Work Bag.

The attractive bag here depicted has its base formed of two squares of card board, the corners of which are rounded off; each piece is lined with satin on one side only, and round one is sewn a band of oriental embroidery measuring 23½ inches by 11½ inches, the extra fullness allowed for the turning of the corners being caught in a few plaits under a mixed cord placed 2 inches from the edge, which is also bound with cord, and likewise the base.

EMBROIDERED WORK BAG.

The band, which is usually made with the borders of Turkish towels, is lined with sateen or soft silk, and inside is inserted the second square of cardboard, with lining uppermost; it is intended to give more firmness to the foundation and more neatness to the inside. A strip of plush, cretonne, or cashmere is added to the top and drawn at the mouth with two mixed cords with tassels at each end the frilling produced by the drawing of the strings is gaudily lined with silk of a contrasting color.

Fashion's Fancies.

Some of the new ribbons have silver edge, or rather double lines of silver at the edge.

Scarlet and spotted net over white silk promises to rival in favor the black lace dresses.

Large buckles measuring six inches long are worn but chiefly with empire collars and their broad bands.

A late freak in evening gloves is to have the Christian name of the wearer worked out in silk across the wrist.

The close fitting, roll over collar that can be turned upon occasion is a sensible feature of some of the latest English coats and jackets.

Improved improvement on the double box plaited tucker of last season made gowns. The plaits still exist but between them there is a full gathered ruffle which gives a fresh effect and takes away from the undeniably skimpy appearance which we seem now to be making.

Beauty Spot Veils.

"Beauty Spot" veils, with sparsely powdered velvet spots, the patch ones, with the large velvet wafers so cunningly placed that they appear on one cheek, the chin and brow, and the Russian net falls, in two or more degrees of fineness, are the fashionable face protectors of the day, all worn below the mouth and generally drawn up from below the chin. As yet they have been only worn in black, but the Russian nets are beginning to appear in light colors.

Odd London Millinery.

Next to heliotrope, gray and "cold pink" appeared to be the favorite colors. Rosella ran these a good fourth. Green made up with black was plentiful. Bonnets are not quite so small as they threatened to be, though some of them were more than eccentric. One was a miniature edition of a North American Indian's head dress, with two feathers standing out at the back at right angles to the bonnet itself.—Madge, in London Truth.

Trouble at Bell's.

Mrs W H Brown of Melita, Man., states that two of her children and two others belonging to a neighbor, were cured of the worst form of summer complaint by one bottle of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, nature's specific for all summer complaints.

Read this extract from the scientific papers of Great Britain and Europe:

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle.

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months and at no other season do the people of this country use an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the dropping into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

T. D. D. Lord, 8 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the unequalled healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together, that I have persevered with it, and I can say my nose is free, in the morning, from any mucus, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I can now breathe freely, and feel that it is to be able to speak freely. I feel that not fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM INSTANTLY RELIEVES Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

NASAL BALM POSITIVELY CURES CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and colds in the Head. In my case it effected a cure from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect relief of any medicine I ever used for Catarrh in the Head. I found it easy to use, giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cents for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing—

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. O. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

MY OWN CANADIAN HOME.

Though other skies may be as bright,
And other lands as fair;
Though charms of other climes invite
My wand'ring footsteps there,
Yet there is one, the poor of all,
Beneath brigh heaven's dome;
Of thee I sing, O happy land,
My own Canadian home.

Thy lakes and rivers, as "the voice
Of many waters" raise
To Him who planned their vast extent
A symphony of praise.
Thy mountain peaks o'erlook the clouds—
They pierce the azure skies;
They bid thy sons be strong and true—
To great achievements rise.

A noble heritage is ours,
So grand and fair and free;
A fertile land, where he who tills
Shall well rewarded be,
And he who joys in nature's charms,
Exulting, feeds his view—
Scenes of enchantment—strangely fair,
Sublime in form and hue.

Shall not the race that tread thy plains,
Spurn all that would enslave?
Or they who battle with thy tides
Shall not that race be brave?
Shall not Niagara's mighty voice
Inspire to actions high?
'Twere easy such a land to love,
Or for her glory die.

And doubt not should a foeman's hand
Be armed to strike at thee,
Thy trumpet call throughout the land
Need scarce repeated be!
As bravely as on Queenston's Heights,
Or as in Lundy's Lane,
Thy sons will battle for thy rights
And freedom's cause maintain.

Did kindly heaven afford to me
The choice where I would dwell,
Fair Canada that choice should be,
The land I love so well.
I love thy hills and valleys wide,
Thy waters' flash and foam;
May God in love o'er thee preside,
My own Canadian home.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

A CRUEL BLOW.

LORD MONFORD, with several other visitors, passed the evening at Dale House. It was not one of the countess's regular reception nights; incident or chance brought them together; but, as it so happened, Lady Ianthe found no opportunity of reading her letter. Only, once or twice, when Silvia passed her, she said, with a smile:

"My plank—I have not tested the strength of my plank yet."

Lord Monford was wonderfully kind and gentle that evening; his thoughtful consideration touched Lady Ianthe's heart.

"I hope to see you to-morrow," he said to her, "I hope to hear some words from your lips that will make me the happiest man in the world. I am counting the hours until to-morrow comes."

She looked up at him with a faint, pallid smile he never forgot.

"The strong are always merciful," she said. "Will you remember that?"

He seemed surprised at her words, and hardly understood them.

"Mercy and you have but little in common," he replied, wonderingly.

It seemed to Lady Ianthe that their visitors would never go. She talked, laughed, played her part, as though no weight of lead was making her heart ache.

They went at last; but even then Lady Ianthe was not free. Lord Leeson had been exceedingly pleased with Lord Monford's manner; the advantages to be derived from his daughter's marriage with him seemed to increase every moment. Then it struck him that as the countess had tried her eloquence, and tried it in vain, it would be as well now for him to begin. As his daughter was quitting the room, he said to her:

"Ianthe, spare me a few minutes this evening; I want to speak to you."

Then she had the same scene to go through again—prayers, entreaties, expostulation, remonstrance, reproach, and passionate pleading. She could make but the same answer—she wanted time, but the earl was not so easily managed as the countess; neither tears nor anything else made the least impression upon him. The question, to his practical mind, lay in a nutshell. Either she loved him, or she did not; either she meant to marry him, or she did not; a straightforward answer was wanted, and it seemed to Lord Leeson a very easy thing to do.

"I do not think any man living can possibly understand a woman," he said to himself. "Now why in the world can not that girl make up her mind, in a sensible kind of way, to marry Monford and put an end to all this nonsense? I suppose common sense, and matter-of-fact, straightforward dealing, are quite beyond feminine capability."

It was very long after midnight when Lady Ianthe left the earl and went to her own room. She was pale and exhausted.

"I cannot bear this much longer," she said. "I am quite tired of my life!"

Then her own fanciful image of the plank came into her mind. A piteous sob rose to her lips.

"I was blind," she said; "I was foolish, but I have my one plank to trust to. What will Clifford say?"

As she passed through the broad, fragrant corridors, a thought of what that letter might contain came to her mind. Love, warm, glowing, devoted love, such as would repay her for all this sacrifice and suffering. He would be sure to write as he had spoken in those happy days when the whole world seemed to centre itself in their love. He would say that he should come and claim her now—come and take her away to a home of their own, humble, perhaps poor but glorified and beautified by love. He would thank her for being so true to him, he would console her in her sorrow; he would bless her, love her, and thank her for her constant devotion. Her letter would tell her all this and more, a thousand times more.

She longed to read it, and now she had it in her possession all those hours.

"How time has changed me!" she thought, sadly. "I can remember when I had not the patience to wait for anything above half an hour."

Then she drew her chair to the toilet table; but the time for reading had not yet come. There was her maid.

"Shall I put away your jewels, my lady?" she asked.

Lady Ianthe was obliged to wait until the pearls were unclasped from her white neck, and from the coils of bright hair, and placed in their cases. Then there was the dress of pretty rose silk, with its lace trimmings; but her patience was ended now.

"Never mind the dress," she said; "I will remove that myself."

She was alone at last, and, with a great sigh of relief she drew the letter from her pocket. A beautiful, tender smile played round her lips as she stood looking at the writing. She kissed the place where his hand had rested.

"My love!" she whispered; "I do not repent it; I will never repent it, for I love you!"

Then she opened the letter. No one could ever describe the last hour and the last thoughts of a condemned criminal; no one could describe the sensations of a drowning man. No one can tell what passed through the gentle heart of Lady Ianthe as she read that letter—her death warrant.

As she read, her face grew ghastly in its white despair, a great cloud of darkness seemed to come over her eyes, her lips quivered, the hands that held the letter trembled; she rose once from her seat, but a great horror came over her—a great dread.

"I cannot believe it!" she said—"I cannot believe it! My senses have played me false—my eyes have read wrongly, or it is a jest—a sorry, cruel jest that he plays upon me. Oh, Clifford! Clifford!"

She read it again.

"If I thought he meant," she said to herself, "I would never live to see another sun rise."

Again and again, as though some secret charm held her, she read the closely written pages. Again and again she tried to rise, but her strength had failed her.

"It must be true," she said at last, in a hoarse voice. "He must mean it."

Then, making a desperate effort, she went to Silvia's room.

"Silvia," she said, "I want you—I want you to see how the plank I trusted for my salvation has slipped from under my feet. Come with me, and read how faithful, how true, how stanch men are; how they reward the love of women; what they give in return when a life has been given to them."

Silvia looked up in alarm at the agitated face, the burning eyes, the white trembling lips.

"Lady Ianthe," she said, "what has happened to you?—what is the matter?"

"Nothing very material," she replied, with a bitter smile, "only the plank has slipped. I told you before that I heard the sound of rushing waters. Silvia, Silvia, they are closing over my head!"

Greatly alarmed, Silvia took her hand.

"I will go with you," she said; "but, dearest Lady Ianthe, you must be composed; you will kill yourself with this agitation."

"I wish I could," she said—"I wish that I knew what would kill me—I would soon try it."

They walked together to her room, and there, upon the floor, Silvia saw the sheets of paper—the letter that contained Lady Ianthe's death-warrant.

CHAPTER XL.

THE COWARD'S SUGGESTION.

"Sit down there," said Lady Ianthe. "Silvia, did you know that men were so treacherous and base—did you know it?"

Ah! Silvia bitterly realized how base and treacherous men could be! Who had suffered more from treachery than she had done? She was a simple country girl; this was an earl's daughter. Could it be possible the same fate had overtaken both? She looked into that beautiful, haggard face.

"Does he, Mr. Raymond, deny the marriage?" she asked.

"No, he does not deny it—better for me a thousand times that he had done so. He admits it; but, oh! Silvia, I cannot tell you. Read for yourself, and see what men are."

She gave the letter into Silvia's hands, and while Mrs. Rymer read, she flung herself with her face on the pillow, moaning out that of all women she was the most wretched.

Silvia's indignation rose to something like furious anger.

"My dearest Ianthe,"—so the death-warrant ran—"I, like you, am dreadfully distressed at the sad turn affairs have taken. I, like you, am utterly at a loss to know what to do. I, like you, am fearfully apprehensive of consequences.

"The cowardly traitor!" murmured Silvia to herself.

"I am afraid, my dearest Ianthe, I must join in saying what we did was most imprudent. You ask my opinion as to what would be the best thing to do under the present state of affairs. Ianthe I do not know. Look which way I will nothing but ruin can follow the revelation of our marriage. It could not be made at a more unfortunate juncture. You say that in this state of things you rely upon me. Alas! that you have no stronger, no firmer source of reliance. I, for my part, feel quite helpless to advise.

"I am placed in these circumstances—but of course you know them. My father, not a wealthy man himself has three daughters to provide for. I, as eldest, have of course the estate; but that estate, as you know, is a very small one, and it will not be mine until my father's death, and in all probability he may live twenty years longer. My allowance is five hundred per annum. Alas, Ianthe! how can I support an earl's daughter as my wife? You see, my dear Ianthe, I am no fortune-hunter—I never was; but when I persuaded you to take that fatal step, I was under the impression that, as the Earl of Leeson's only child, you would have fortune enough to prevent our marriage from being deemed a very imprudent one. This revelation of the desperate state of the earl's affairs takes me quite by surprise; in fact, it ties my hands, and takes from me all power of acting.

"Then, knowing our circumstances, my father is very anxious for me to marry well. What he calls well, is some one with plenty of money. Of course, no alliance could be more flattering than a marriage with the Earl of Leeson's daughter; but if my father knew that that same earl was a bankrupt peer, it would make a great difference in his estimation. Remember, dearest Ianthe, I am speaking of my father's opinions, not my own. For myself—ah! well you know, Ianthe, what I think.

"I dare not tell my father what I have done; I dare not, Ianthe; his anger would be so great. He would instantly stop my allowance, and then I should be penniless. That is what would follow the avowal of marriage on my side; now for yours. It seems to me that if you say one word the most complete and utter ruin follows it—your father becomes bankrupt—ruin, misery, and despair.

"Now, Ianthe, looking this quite calmly in the face, what can I think or say?—what can we do? Ruin follows any declaration of our marriage. It seems to me the only resource for either of us is to keep our secret still.

"You will ask me how that is to be done? I ought to be the last man in the world even to suggest such a thing; but I see nothing else for it—nothing else in the wide world. Let us, for instance, say that I write you a most romantic letter, saying I cannot live without you—and you know, dearest Ianthe, that is true. Suppose I urge you at all cost to leave home and join me what happens then?

"We are quite without money; we have no home, no prospect of getting one it might be years before I could get the least appointment. During that time how could we live?—you especially, who have been brought up in luxury, and have never known privation or care?

"It would be simple madness, Ianthe. You know it, I know it. We should not only go to ruin ourselves, but we should drag many others down with us; we should destroy many lives besides our own. I see but this one alternative—we must let that unfortunate marriage be as though it had never been.

"You will shrink from this. So do I—I cannot tell you how much, but I see no alternative. Do you understand me, Ianthe? No one knows our secret; it cannot be known; it is as safe as though we were both dead. Then, what I propose is this; but before I write it—O Ianthe, Ianthe, my love, how it grieves me!—before I write it, let me tell you how dearly I love you, and how, from the very depths of my heart, I grieve for this untoward aspect of affairs.

"This is my proposal, Ianthe. Let that unfortunate marriage go by as though it had never taken place. We need not mention it. There may have been some informality in it that renders it null and void—I cannot say. We, who contracted it, will render it null and void by our own free will—we will annul it; and then we can each follow the path that seems best for us.

"Do not think, Ianthe, these words cause me no pain; they do—a most bitter pain. When I remember how dearly I have loved you, how bright and glowing my hopes were on the morning I married you—when I think of our plans and hopes, my heart is as bitter as death; but I have common sense, and I see no help for it.

"So, Ianthe, you must look upon what we thought marriage simply as a betrothal, and from this betrothal I release you; I release you from every promise you have ever made to me; I release you from every tie of fidelity; I ask nothing from you but a place in your memory.

"That is my proposal. Consider it well, Ianthe. It gives you freedom, liberty, wealth, the power of pleasing your friends; it gives me the ability to please my father. Take into consideration that our marriage was a mistaken one; that we were led into it through error over your father's position; that had we known at the time the reality and the truth, we should neither of us have dreamed of marriage. Consider another thing—that married in that secret, underhand way, there may be some flaw that will render that marriage quite invalid.

"You see, Ianthe, that is the only feasible plan I can suggest. Now for your objections. First, it will necessitate our parting. That, we cannot help; as circumstances are, we must part. Better that than to drag many others into an abyss of misery. It will be hard, but we can be friends, and no one knows what the future holds in its grasp.

"Another objection that you will perhaps make, is, that it is not right. That Ianthe, is a mistake, a false scruple, founded on false notions; there is no sense in it. Our marriage, as I have said before, was a betrothal; the fact of its secrecy made it so; and from the pledge of a betrothal we may always release one another.

"You will break not moral law in my eyes. There is nothing like having a good, bold, intellectual grasp of those things. You will do no wrong, if you join with me in annulling this contract of ours. It concerns no one else but ourselves.

"Having laid my thoughts very clearly before you, Ianthe, I now offer you the best advice I can: accept Lord Monford's proposals. You will secure wealth and everything else, except love; and, remember, life holds many chances. I cannot allude more plainly to what I mean. Marry Lord Monford, then you will have taken the best possible precaution for yourself. I, think, Ianthe, that I shall go abroad. I find that I love you too well to stand by quietly and see you married to another. I find my heart heavy, and my whole soul sad.

"I shall in all probability go soon, and then you will know that the waves of the sea, the whispers of the wind, are not more free than you to do as you will. Perhaps, Ianthe, under these circumstances, it will be better for you to destroy all letters, and all trace of correspondence. This, the sweet, hidden romance of our youth will always bring bitter pain with its memory; but to me it will be the sweetest, dearest, and most precious portion of my life.

"Now I must say farewell, Ianthe. This is not what we dreamed of that bright morning; but fate and fortune have been too strong for us. There is nothing for us but philosophical resolution. Rest assured of one thing, Ianthe, ours is not the only romance of the kind to be found in the world. If we could only read the secret of hearts, we should know there were many other such secrets as ours."

CHAPTER XLI.

REPROACH, MISERY, AND DESPAIR.

"My opinion of Mr. Raymond," said Silvia, "is most decidedly that he is mad. I can see nothing else for it."

But the beautiful, unhappy girl, crouching on the ground, moaning out the wretchedness of her lot, made no reply.

"He must be mad," continued Silvia; "no man in his senses could be so devoid of principle, of morality, of common sense, of every good and righteous impulse. He must be mad, or—"

Then she paused, and Lady Ianthe raised her haggard face.

"Or what?" she asked.

"Or he must know of something that makes the form of marriage you went through null and void."

She shook her head, with a low, desponding sigh.

"It is not so, Silvia," she said. "I can distinctly remember, as we stood in the vestry that morning, he turned to me and said:

"That has been managed very quietly and cleverly, Ianthe. No soul knows anything of it; yet we are as securely married as though the Archbishop of Canterbury, with every dean in his diocese, had helped to marry us.'

"I remember, Silvia, that he used those very words. Rely upon it that whatever else was wrong, that was right. Oh, Silvia, Silvia! was ever pride brought so low as mine? I gave him my life, and he lays it down as easily as though it were a faded flower. Oh, Silvia! was ever woman brought so low?"

"If I were a man," said Silvia, in a low, clear voice, "I would follow him and shoot him."

Lady Ianthe held up her hands with a shudder of dismay.

"Hush!" she said. "I have loved him. He was my hero once, as the husband you loved was your hero. I can not endure to hear such words, because it makes me think the man I loved so base—I cannot bear them."

"He is base," said Silvia, indignantly. "I have heard of many cruel cases, of many bad and treacherous men, of many who have been wanting in principle and morality, but I never heard of one so utterly, so contemptibly base."

Lady Ianthe clasped her hands with a low moan.

"You are killing me, Silvia," she said, "you are killing me."

Seeing the torture of anguish in that white face, Silvia laid the letter down and bent over the hapless girl.

"Pray forgive me," she said; "my great anger made me forget myself. We will talk no more of him, but of you. What shall you do now?"

"Die!" she replied, in a voice so hoarse and terrible that Silvia was frightened. "Die! there is nothing left for Ianthe—but death. What can I do, Silvia? Let him say what he will, that marriage was a true one, and I must abide by it. Because the obligation sits lightly on him, it is no reason why it should sit lightly on me; because no moral law or moral force binds him, that is no reason why it should not bind me. I cannot throw off all restraint as he has done."

"No," replied Silvia, "you cannot, you must abide by the marriage."

"Then if I look my position plainly in the face," said Lady Ianthe, "what do I see? I am the daughter of one of the proudest peers in England; yet such

IT SHINES FOR ALL.

ORANGEVILLE, AUG. 21, 1890.

FROG catching for the New York market is a profitable industry on Moira Lake, near Madoc. The Belleville Ontario states that some hunters last week shipped 190 pounds of hind legs of frogs, gathered in two nights, to New York. They were for the famous Delmonico and are dished to the millionaire New Yorkers as great delicacies. The bright headlights of the boat blinds the frogs and they are picked out of the water, slaughtered and deposited in the boats. The work is done in the cool of the evening, the boats being noiselessly propelled by paddle through the swamps and marshes of the lakes. The shipments of those hunters for the whole season will be several tons.

A PUBLIC PARK.

To the Editor of THE SUN:

DEAR SIR—Each returning summer we are delayed with talk concerning a public park and lake. That such a worthy enterprise should end in talk is to be regretted, yet that much talk is needed before the public can be induced to enter on such a project goes without saying.

That the construction of an artificial lake at the north eastern part of the town is possible, is certain, and the only thing to be decided is, would the advantages gained, by having a small pleasure ground and lake near our town be sufficient to compensate for the labor exerted and the money expended?

In the first place it would certainly be of great benefit to our pleasure-loving public, this in itself should be sufficient, but lest some may desire rather to look at the subject from a financial standpoint, let us turn to that.

Had we in our town a pleasant ground for picnics, to which was added the attraction of a small lake there is no doubt that excursions would be run to Orangeville from all the surrounding districts. This in itself would bring to our town much money; but it would not stop there. By this means our town would be advertised, not by a Toronto summer Carnival, but by a quiet, old and abiding pleasure ground. Thus families would be attracted to the town, and we can tell the benefit from a financial standpoint, that would thus be gained.

Were such a scheme undertaken by our enterprising men, I have no doubt the ladies could supplement the amount contributed by the citizens by a liberal amount, and once on a fair footing I think the matter would find little opposition.

I know that "I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done than be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching" yet greater enterprises have been undertaken and accomplished and why not this. But let some enterprising gentlemen take hold of the matter, and by this time next summer we may have a public park on a fair way to completion. Yours, NEMO.

DEATH OF CARDINAL NEWMAN.

CARDINAL NEWMAN, who was taken ill of pneumonia at Birmingham, died there on Monday evening, Aug. 12 th.

John Henry Newman was born in London in 1801. His father was a banker and well to do. He passed his boyhood in the great city, and had the advantage from his earliest years of the best educational facilities his time offered. From earliest childhood he showed a thoughtful disposition, and even as a boy developed a strong tendency toward theological thought and research. As a lad he attended a private school at Ealing, whence he went to Trinity College, Oxford. Here he graduated with honors in classics in 1820. Being elected a fellow of Oriel College he came in contact with men who left their mark upon the thought of the time, including Whately and Hawkins, afterwards provost of Oriel. In 1825 he became vice principal of St. Alban's Hall under Whately, and a year later tutor of his college and subsequently examiner. In 1828 he became incumbent of St. Mary's Oxford, which position he held for fourteen years. He developed great power as a preacher and attracted the admiring attention of the country. Early in his incumbency of St. Mary's he became intimately associated with Pusey, Keble and other ardent young men destined soon to become leaders with him in the Tractarian movement. This movement was in opposition to the tendencies of the Broad Church party and took the form of the publication of a series of pamphlets. The latest of these tracts, No. 90, was written by Newman himself, and argued that subscription to the articles of the Church of England was not incompatible with holding many of the doctrines of the Church of Rome. This brought into actively hostile form a feeling which had for some time existed widely among the people that the tendency of the Tractarian movement was to Romanise the Church of England. Tract 90 was condemned by the university authorities, and under the censure which his efforts had provoked Newman resigned his seat and went into retirement. In 1875 he definitely seceded to the Roman Catholic Church. Three years later he was ordained priest and was appointed head of the Oratory at Birmingham. Later he founded the Brompton Oratory, and afterwards repaired to the new Oratory at Edgbaston, near Birmingham. This was his work for a long period, broken only by his residence in Dublin from 1854 to 1858 as rector of the Roman Catholic University there. On returning to England he wrote his famous Apologia Pro Vita Sua in reply to a strong attack made upon him by Rev. Charles Kingsley. This work will probably survive longer than any other of his prose writings. He wrote many other works of a controversial nature and imaginative character, all of which attracted wide attention. In 1877 Dr Newman was elected an honorary fellow of Trinity College. In 1879 he was created a cardinal deacon by Pope Leo XIII. The closing years of Dr Newman's life were spent in quiet. No account of Newman's life, however brief, can be complete without mention of the hymn "Lead, Kindly Light," which is sung wherever the Christian Church is known, and which alone is enough to give the author's name a place in the affections of the people. This beautiful and noble hymn was written when Dr. Newman was about 32 years old, while on a journey from Sicily to England.

DEATH OF JUDGE MILES O'REILLY.

He held a commission as colonel of militia, and has been Master in Chancery for 19 years. Both of Mr. O Reilly's grand sires were U. E. Loyalists. He was born in Samford in 1806, and was Hamilton's oldest inhabitant, having lived here for the past sixty years. He was confined to his bed three weeks ago, and succumbed to old age, as he had no specific disease.

SAD DEATH.—It is with extreme sorrow that we hear of the death of Mr. Robert Jackson, Jr., of Mono, which took place at 2 o'clock on Monday. DEATH.—The death of another resident of this town is chronicled in the person of Elizabeth, wife of Wm. Harding, who died from inflammation of the bowels on Thursday last, after a brief illness. Deceased leaves a young family of nine—five sons and four daughters. Much sympathy is expressed for the husband and family, in this, their sad bereavement. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon to the Forest Lawn cemetery.

BRADY'S BALLOON.—The trouble that has been caused by Prof. Brady's balloon which lit on the farm of Mr. Geo. Hannahson on the 12th of July last is not settled yet. Readers of THE SUN are familiar with the cause of the dispute between Constable Hubbard and the Hannahson Bros. The latter have the constable up for trespass, and Hubbard retaliates by pulling the brothers for the larceny of 400 feet of rope. The cases came before P. M. Pattullo, but were adjourned until Tuesday.

WON BY HARD WORK.—Mr. T. C. Doldge, of 372 Wellesley Street, Toronto, fourth year undergraduate of Toronto University, won The Canadian Queen's "Free Trip to Europe" by making over eleven hundred words from letters contained in the name of that magazine. Mr. Doldge worked over seventy hours to accomplish the task. He sails by the "Parisian," September 3rd, and will be abroad three months. The publishers of The Queen will soon announce another "Free Trip to Europe" word contest, with $200 for expenses.

DIED AT TORONTO.—Mr. Paul Gallaugher, of Toronto, formerly of Perm, Mulmur township, died at the former place on the 7th inst. For some time past the deceased gentleman had not been enjoying the best of health and his death was not unexpected. Mr. Gallaugher was well-known around here and his death will be generally regretted. He removed from Perm to Toronto two or three years ago and was engaged in speculating in the city. The remains were interred at the Stone church, Mulmur, the following Friday.

A GREAT BINDER.—Hundreds of our citizens witnessed the test of the famous Turnbull self-binder, manufactured here by Mr. J. A. McMaster, in a large field of oats near the Dufferin lacrosse grounds on Saturday last. It is almost needless to say that the simple, little machine worked to perfection and cut and bound the grain faster than any other binder possibly could. Everybody went away satisfied that the Turnbull will be the binder of the future. It is the lightest and simplest machine manufactured and Mr. J. A. McMaster has a bonanza in his venture.

WALKERTON DEFEATED.—A very interesting game of lacrosse was played on the Dufferins' grounds on Tuesday between the Owen Sound and Walkerton clubs. The match was a protested game, which was previously won by Walkerton, but was ordered to be played over here. A crowd from each town accompanied the boys. The weather was very unfavorable for lacrosse, rain falling during the entire game, nevertheless a large number of people attended. The Walkerton boys played the best lacrosse, but they were in hard luck and succumbed to the Owen Sounders. Owen Sound captured the first, second, fourth and fifth games, while Walkerton took the third.

TRAVELLING ON PUBLIC ROADS.—On the 1st day of August the following amendment to the law governing travelling on highways, came into force:—"Any person so overtaking another vehicle or horseman shall turn out to the left so far as may be necessary to avoid a collision with the vehicle or horseman so overtaken shall not be required to leave more than one half of the road free." The old clause read:—"In case a person travelling or being upon a highway in charge of a vehicle as aforesaid, or on horseback, is overtaken by any vehicle or horseman driving at greater speed the person so overtaken shall quietly turn out to the right and allow the said vehicle or horseman to pass." It will thus be seen that now it is the last man who has to turn out, not the first rider.

RUNAWAY.—On Monday evening a horse belonging to Mr. J. J. Ellis, of Caledon, broke loose in the Paisley house sheds and dashed down Broadway at terrific pace. When at the market square the carriage collided with an electric light pole, and the former was smashed to smithereens. The horse continued its run down Broadway with the two front wheels of the vehicle at its heels. Another collision took place between the runaway and a team attached to a lumber wagon owned by Bill Nelson, of Mono. Nelson's horses went on the warpath and badly damaged the wagon before they could be stopped. Ellis' horse distributed various parts of the carriage all along the road, but was finally captured. The carriage was completely ruined.

ANNUAL MEETING.—The annual meeting of the local branch of the Upper Canada Tract Society was held in the Baptist church a week ago Thursday evening. The leading feature of the proceedings was an address by Dr. Moffat on "Young Canada in Earnest." The lecture was listened to by the audience with much interest, after which $4 36 was collected in aid of the society's colportage work. The treasurer's report showed that $48 86 had been collected last year. Strenuous efforts will be made by the officers to double that amount this year. The officers elected this year are: Rev. J. L. Gilmour, president; local clergymen, vice-presidents; J. A. Aikin, secretary-treasurer; [illegible] Kinz, Alex Turnbull, J. S. Leighton, R. Young, committee; Misses Robb and Ritchie, collectors for North Ward; Misses Kennedy and Sproul, South Ward; Misses Sutherland and Wylie, East Ward; Misses Smith and Brown, West Ward.

POCKETED A PURSE.—While Mrs James May was doing some shopping in one of the Broadway stores the other day she laid her purse on the counter until she looked at some goods. After the lady inspected the article she turned around to get her pocket-book, but it was no where to be seen. Luckily there were only six or seven persons in the store at the time, and none of them had gone out except a young girl who resides in the East ward. Suspicion at once fell on upon her and Mrs. May and Chief Shields proceeded to the girl's house. In response to the unwelcome visitors knock the suspected girl came to the door herself and when she saw who was there she turned snowy white. Mrs. May said if the missing purse was returned she would not prosecute. The young lady handed it over at once, but said not that she found it on the street, and in this plea she was backed up by her mother, who knew as much about the case as the Orangeville council knows about saving the ratepayers' money. Cases similar to this have happened in Orangeville before now.

COLERIDGE.

The "Huckleberry marsh" is quite a haunt for huckleberry pickers. They come from every point of the compass.

Harvesting is in full bloom now. Most of the farmers of this vicinity have their fall wheat and barley in.

What we would like to know:—Who is going to have the cakes for the northwestern lacrosse district, and how the Dufferins come to be ruled out? When Coleridge and Melancthon teams are going to play?

PERSONAL.—Miss Maggie Hunter is visiting friends at Guelph....Mrs. Harrison, of Lockport, N. Y., is visiting her sister, Mrs. Jas. Harrison of this place.

MELANCTHON STATION.

Haying is a thing of the past so far as 1890 is concerned. The crop this year is abundant.

Harvesting is the order of the day. All the farmers of this section are up to their necks in work, and they report the yield up to the average. The fruit crop looks well. Apples especially will be abundant.

Mrs. Fleming, of Owen Sound, is visiting her brother, Mr. Jas. Brown, here for a few days.

Mr. Joseph Watson is home from Owen Sound on a visit, where he has been working during the summer.

Messrs. Sanderson, Walker & Co. have opened up an account with Toronto butchers. They ship from here every day from one to four carcasses of beef. Who says Melancthon is not forging ahead?

The wife of Mr. Patrick Fadden, of Melancthon, died at her residence a week ago Sunday. Deceased had attained a ripe old age, and left this "vale of tears" after seeing many changes and improvements of this living age. The funeral took place on Monday and was very largely attended.

SHELBURNE.

(From the Free Press and Economist.)

Mr. Thos. Hall, editor of the Dundalk Herald occupied the pulpit in the Shelburne Methodist church last Sunday morning and evening, and preached interesting sermons to attentive congregations. The pastor, Rev. H. W. McTavish, preached in Orangeville.

On Tuesday the hose company formed into two divisions and had a race to see who got on first stream. Pretty good time was made, and the efficiency of that department of Shelburne Fire Brigade was shown.

The other day a young immigrant boy who has been working for Mr. Wm Dynes, of Granger, had one hand badly lacerated through having it caught on the hook of a rack lifter. Dr. Rooney had to make several stitches.

Mrs Cameron, relict of the late John Cameron, of Caledon, and mother of Mr. James Cameron, foreman of the Free Press died on Saturday evening at her son's residence here, aged 82 years. The funeral was held on Monday afternoon, Shelburne cemetery.

As the fall and winter approaches would it not be well for our city pa's to consider the feasibility of providing a shelter from the cold for those roosters who perch along the whole front and corner of the Imperial Block every Saturday evening, much to the annoyance of the general public, and who never fail to leave their spittoons to home "Do our fathers sleep?"

THE MOVING HAND SATCHEL.

The Most Gallant of Toronto's Fair Girls.

(Published by Request.)

Miss Jennie Fox, sister of Dr. Fox, 102 Gerrard street east, and a lady and gentleman friend were boating on Grenadier pond, where they came in contact with a mud-turtle, which the gentleman suggested he would take into the boat, at which the girls were horrified. Presently Miss Fox spontaneously said: "I can master it!" It being choir practice that evening for Miss Fox, they then took a high park car, where the ladies cheerfully gave Miss Fox their seats. The gentleman who caught it called for the mounted police to arrest her, but he answered so favorably for her that the gentleman felt rather cheap. Now comes the task to conceal the restless creature while at practice. Presently that bright intellect caught the idea: "I will put it in to my hand satchel. Presently the attention of the choir was arrested, the lady friends were soon absent, from the moving hand satchel, and the gentleman left with Miss Fox to solve the mysterious problem, when to their surprise the satchel opened and out came the turtle, which caused the men to tremble while Miss Fox stood calmly looking on in amazement to see her lady friends desert her, while the gentlemen were in astonishment. She thought that the little things will confound the mighty. She has it now a grand little pet, as it strikes the key-note of all to sound the heroism of our Toronto girls.

Some of the Russian peasants are said to sell their own children without scruple. One peasant in Moscow lately sold his daughter, a girl of 8 years, to travelling mendicants, for six rubles; another one brought two girls to the town of Granova where he sold the older, a child of 7 years, for five roubles, and the younger, 3 years, old, for three roubles. Such instances have occurred in many other towns of the government.

One day last week three head of cattle belonging to Mr. James Sawden managed to get out of the field in which they were pasturing on to the C. P. R. track and were so badly hurt by a train that they had to be killed. The C. P. R. company should take immediate steps to have those measly wire fences put in a proper condition and thereby save future fruitless butchering. Mr. Sawden's loss will amount to considerable: as the cattle were fine animals.

Suddenly Prostrated.

GENTLEMEN,—I was suddenly prostrated while at work by a severe attack of cholera morbus. We sent at once for a doctor, but he seemed unable to help. ## GRAND VALLEY.

(From our own.)

A sample of foreigners with a tame bear frightened a number of our citizens with its howls one day on the street Monday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Richardson left on Tuesday on a trip to New York. Wednesday morning word was received in the village of the death of Mr. Richardson's brother Andrew in Fergus.

Revival meetings were continued in the Presbyterian church on Monday and Tuesday evenings by Mr. McLeish. Mr. D Strachan, of Mela, assisted on Tuesday evening.

A few days ago Mr. S. McDonald had the misfortune to step on a nail which ran through the sole of his shoe and severely injured his foot. Mr. S. Tweedy takes charge of and runs the bus to the station during Stewart's lay-off nursing his disabled member.

Mr. John Hendry has his right eye under bandage from the effects of a stye or something of that nature. John will probably have the use of his member in a day or two, as an improvement has set in.

The congregation of St. Andrew's church, Hillsburg, have given a unanimous call to the Rev. D. McGillivray, late of London. The congregation of Bethel church, Price's Corner, will likely be unanimous also, as the two stations work together.

Good weather has harvest during the past week. This is gathered in. Several fields of the pea crop are reported worthless, the vines having dried up and died away during the past week or two. Farmers cannot understand the cause. The oat crop in general is thought to be a failure, the heads of the grain appearing white and not filled. Spring wheat looks well and promises a fair yield. Potatoes appear to be a good crop, and turnips that have escaped the fly are coming on well.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Rheumatism and Gout.—These purifying and soothing remedies deserved the earnest attention of all persons liable to gout, sciatica, or other painful affections of the muscles, nerves, or joints. The Ointment should be applied after the affected parts have been patiently fomented with warm water, when the ointment should be diligently rubbed upon the adjacent skin, unless the friction causes pain. Holloway's Pills should be simultaneously taken to diminish pain, reduce inflammation, and purify the blood. This treatment abates the violence, and lessens the frequency of gout, rheumatism, and all spasmodic diseases which spring from hereditary predisposition, or from any accidental weakness of constitution. The Ointment checks the local malady, while the Pills restore vital power.

a man as Clifford Raymond's father would make his son penniless for having married me. I am the lawful wife of a man whose only anxiety is to be free from me, and who treats his marriage as an absurd joke—a jest, a mere empty ceremony that he can annul at his pleasure."

She paused—for the vehement passion of her own words frightened her.

"Can I go to my father and tell him that I am Clifford Raymond's wife, when Clifford himself tells me that I am free—can I even tell him? If I told my father that I was married, would he deny it? Then how could I survive the disgrace?"

She fell slumbering again, moaning out what had she done that she was so heavily punished, crying out that she could not bear it—that it was too cruel.

"I shall never mention that marriage," she said, when her violent passion of grief had abated. "I shall never mention his name; no one shall know how he dared to win me and throw me off because my father's circumstances were different to what he thought them; no one shall know the depth to which I have fallen, the cruel blow that has slain me; yet I shall abide by that marriage, as a true and lawful one before Heaven.

"Oh, Silvia, Silvia! is there anything for me except death? I cannot set aside the marriage, nor can I own it. I cannot be untrue to the man I call my husband, neither can I appeal to him for the protection of his name. I cannot marry Lord Mordord, neither can I tell my parents why I cannot marry him. I must refuse in this, the great crisis of their lives, to help them, yet I cannot tell them why I refuse, they will think me cold and heartless, yet I cannot tell them my heart is broken. Oh, Silvia! there is nothing but death for me!"

"Nay," said Mrs. Rymer. "Remember what even Jacques says, 'Life holds many chances.'"

Too haggard face was raised to hers.

"Chances yet, but not when one has deliberately shut herself from all chances as I have done. What can life hold for me? Not love. Oh, cruel word! What is so cruel in all this world as love? Not love, but my heart is broken, not marriage, for I am married to one who gives me my liberty, as he would give away an old garment, not pleasure, not happiness, not even comfort, not the luxury of helping others. Life holds none of these things for me."

Silvia knew it was so, and could answer never a word.

"Stay! I tell you what life holds for me? Shame, ruin, reproach, misery, and despair."

Silvia murmured some words about duty. The girl laughed derisively.

"Duty! To what—to whom? To the parents my ruin must ruin? to the husband who leaves me that my marriage was only an empty ceremony? Duty! How can one remember that, when the very landmarks of life are torn away?"

She pushed away the heavy cluster of hair that lay over her brow.

"Silvia," she said, piteously, looking with sad eyes in the gentle face bending over her, "Silvia I can remember in the happy life that seems to me so far back I was—proud of being beautiful. I am beautiful now, am I not?"

There was such a wistful sadness in her voice that Silvia knew how far there was from happiness, vanity, even.

"You are very, very lovely, Lady Iantha," she replied.

"Beautiful—with care. Oh, Silvia, tell me what to do with this hair. They have not made me happy, dear."

"Because—I could—I—I only, in your life there has been a terrible mistake, but that mistake has been of your own making."

"I know it; there is no help nor remedy for it. I must abide by its consequences."

"There was some [illegible] Lady Iantha, she repeated

Poetry.

A COUNTRY COURTSHIP.

Driving the cows from the upper meadow—
Beauty and Brindle and Brose—
How in the sunlight, now in the shadow,
And now in the wind's caress;
With song as round as of morn the starling
Is wont to the skies to trill;
Mollie, the farmer's daughter and darling,
Comes tripping adown the hill.

Purple and black are the braided tresses
Her dainty temples that crown;
Light is her step on the sward it presses,
As fall from the thistle down.
The squirrel's peak from the wayside hedges,
As the maiden moves along,
And count it chief of their privileges
To lift to her jocund song.

Down where the alders and slender rushes
Border the rivulet's banks,
And the widened sweep of the water gushes
Under a bridge's broad planks;
Whistling a love song, in broken snatches—
His hat pushed back from his brows—
Robin, the miller, awaits and watches
For the coming of the cows.

Up to their knees in the stream, the cattle
Drink deep of its crystal flow;
Little they care for the lovers' prattle
Or the bliss the twain may know;
Their hearing skies with their draughts distended,
They enter the path again,
And crop the grasses with heads low bended
On either side of the lane.

The shadows deepen; the dew is sprinkling
With diamonds all the meads;
And faint and far, in the distance tinkling,
The sound of the bells recedes.
Still on the bridge where the water glistens,
As the moonlight on it falls,
The miller talks, and the maiden listens,
But the cows are in their stalls.

CHAPTER XLII.

A TERRIBLE SHOCK.

BUT Silvia was unwilling to leave the unhappy girl.

"Lady Ianthe," she said, frankly, "I am afraid to leave you. Will you promise me to go to rest?"

The gray shade deepened on her face.

"I promise you," she said, wearily; "let that content you. I will go to rest."

And it never occurred to Mrs. Rymer that she laid a strange emphasis on the ominous word—rest. Just as she was leaving the room Lady Ianthe caught her arm.

"Silvia," she said, "I was almost forgetting one thing. I want you to promise me—not a light promise, but an oath—you must take your oath to me that, let what may happen, you will never reveal one word of what I have told you."

"Will not my word suffice?" asked Silvia, quietly.

"No! Ah, me! ah, me! what is the word of man or woman worth? Give me your oath, Silvia! Life, as my chivalrous lover says, is full of chances, no one knows what may happen. Swear to me, that it by good or evil fortune anything happens to me, and my secret is suspected, swear to me that under no circumstances, under no compulsion, will you ever reveal one word of what I have told you—you must swear."

Holding Silvia's hand in her own, she made her take an oath so solemn that she knew it could never be broken.

"Now go, Silvia," said Lady Ianthe; "I have so much to do. I must destroy those letters, so as to leave no trace behind of the hidden romance, the wonderful romance of my life. I have one or two letters to write. Leave me, dear. Good night."

Long afterward Silvia remembered how Lady Ianthe clasped her white arms round her neck and pressed her cold lips to her face.

"You are very kind to me," she said. "Go now, dear; it will soon be morning, and I have so much to do."

Silvia went, feeling more at ease than she had done for some time. Lady Ianthe had promised to go to rest. Perhaps, after all, the terrible trouble might in some way be averted. She slept, because she was exhausted, and did not wake until long after the fatal morning had dawned.

Lady Ianthe's face changed again as the door closed after Silvia; the coldness and despair seemed to leave it; warm lovely flushes of color glowed over it.

"I was such a happy girl," she said to herself, "such a happy girl."

She was like one taking some last view of a picture, a bright and beautiful picture. The light lingered on her face as she looked at it, then a great sigh came from the overcharged heart, a terrible sigh, as she turned away. She had finished with that picture forever, then.

She went to one of her drawers, unlocked it, and took from it a packet of letters. Only Heaven knew what those letters had been to her once; how full they were of love, of vows, of tender words of treachery and untruth. They were tied with blue ribbon, and it was the first time in her life that she had ever touched them without passionate kisses, loving words.

Now she took them and deliberately tore them to pieces, tore them into a thousand shreds. There was no softening of her face as she did so, a terribly strange work had fallen over it. When the heap of white paper lay before her she opened the window, and let the wind carry the fragments slowly away.

She stood there, perhaps for an hour. It was the hour before dawn, and the wind was high. It took the fragments of paper and whirled them over the tops of houses, over trees, scattered them far and wide, yet not so far as the hopes with which they had been read had been scattered.

She listened to the distant chiming of the church clocks, and never a prayer that Heaven would have mercy on her soul came from her lips.

Then she went to the writing table and wrote two letters; she addressed them, leaving both envelopes open.

In that same writing-table was a little drawer, a secret drawer, which she opened now, and from which she took a small bottle. How she came by it seemed wonderful at first, until some one remembered that long ago she had suffered from neuralgia, and this medicine had been prescribed as a cure. She held the little bottle in her hand.

"How I have suffered before I could do this. My heart is broken, my strength has left me. My love has grown cruel and cold, cruel and cold. I wonder what comes—hereafter."

* * * * *

It was late when Silvia Rymer awoke that morning, a beautiful summer morning, the sun shining brightly, the birds singing, the flowers blooming fair: morning that seemed to bid all hearts rejoice, because nature, fair, sweet nature was so bright. She did not feel particularly anxious over Ladyelanthe. It frequently happens that after dreading a catastrophe for some long time, a certain calm and peace falls over us just before it happens. So it was with Silvia; she had long felt very unhappy over Lady Ianthe but on this morning, when the very worst had happened, she felt no particular misgiving over her.

The house seemed unusually quiet. Silvia was at first apprehensive that she might have overslept herself. She hastened down stairs. The earl had taken breakfast and was in his study.

"My lady was still in her room," the maid said; "she was tired this morning."

"Where was Lady Ianthe?" asked Silvia.

Lady Ianthe's maid told her that her mistress was not yet awake.

Silvia thought to herself that she was pleased it was so; she was evidently forgetting her troubles in sleep.

Silvia took her breakfast, and then looking at her watch, saw that it was after ten. It occurred to her that after all the exhaustion and emotion Lady Ianthe would be glad of some tea. She filled a cup and took it up to her.

The rule of the house was that no maid should enter the rooms belonging to the ladies until rung for. Lady Ianthe had not rung, so Lady Ianthe's maid had not entered.

Silvia rapped at the door, but no answer came; then she tried it gently and found it was not locked, only secured by a little bolt. She pushed it—still there came no sound.

"Lady Ianthe," she said in a low voice.

There came no reply. She went in, and to the day of her death she never forgot the terrible shock that came over her as she saw that silent figure in the chair—a shock that seemed to drive the blood from her heart, and the strength from her limbs.

"Could she have fallen asleep there?" cried the girl to herself. "Lady Ianthe," she said again. Still no answer came; but as Silvia ventured one step forward into that silent room, there came to her a faint perfume of almonds.

She put the cup down and went to the chair. One glance at that ghastly face was quite enough. With a cry that seemed to echo through that silent house, Silvia ran down to Lady Leeson's room.

"You cannot come in," said the maid; "my lady is dressing."

But Silvia hastily pushed past her. Lady Leeson looked up with a face of alarm.

"What is the matter, Mrs. Rymer?" she asked.

Silvia tried to speak, but the shock had been too great for her; she raised her hand and fell fainting at Lady Leeson's feet.

CHAPTER XLIII.

SILVIA'S DISCLOSURE.

The countess looked at her maid in great perplexity.

"Surely this is very strange," she said, "to rush into my room and faint at my feet in this way. It is very unlike Mrs. Rymer. Call some one to help you, Fraser."

Another maid was called, and they raised Silvia and placed her on a chair.

"I cannot understand it," said Lady Leeson. "It is so unlike Mrs. Rymer."

Suddenly another idea occurred to her. She turned to her maid with a pale, scared face.

"It can never be," she said, "that anything has happened Lady Ianthe. Go to her room, Fraser. Tell her that I want her."

The countess sat waiting, frightened, she knew not why, when another terrible cry came from that room. She rose from her seat, pale, trembling.

"Something has happened," she said. She went to the door of her room. Lord Leeson was hastily ascending the staircase.

"What does all this noise mean?" he asked. "Have all your maids gone crazy together?"

"There is something wrong," said the countess, with clasped hands, "and I am afraid it is in Ianthe's room."

"They have seen a mouse or heard one," said the earl, impatiently. "It is nothing worse, I am sure."

But the words died on his lips as he saw Fraser, his wife's maid. Fraser was a staid, sensible woman, not inclined to nervous fears.

"Oh! my lord," she said; "pray take my lady away, something terrible has occurred."

Lord Leeson was warmly attached to his wife, but in this moment of anxiety he quite lost sight of her.

"Is it Lady Ianthe?" he asked; and the woman replied with a burst of passionate, hysterical tears.

Lord Leeson pushed the weeping woman aside, and ran up to his daughter's room. His wife heard one terrified cry of, "Oh, my God!" and then a painful silence.

She would have followed him, but Silvia, who had by this time recovered, took her by the arm.

"Do not go there, Lady Leeson," she said; "come back to your own room."

Unresisting, haggard, silent, the poor lady did as Silvia wished. She sat down and looked at her, with a face that was terrible to see.

"Will you tell me what is the matter, Mrs. Rymer?" she said. "I could never bear suspense. What has happened to my daughter? She is not ill. Last night I kissed her beautiful face and she was well. Has she—has she run away—perhaps I pressed her rather too hardly—has she run away?"

If it only had been that!

"No," replied Silvia, gently. "Lady Leeson, I can not tell you, you had better hear it from your husband's lips."

The gray shade that came over her face was terrible to see.

"Is she ill—dead? Oh! Mrs. Rymer, tell me! She is dead; I know by that look on your face. Oh, my child! my darling!"

Over such a scene draw a veil. Lady Leeson was a brilliant, worldly woman, but she dearly loved her daughter—how dearly she did not know until death stepped in and took her only child from her.

"Have I driven her to death?" she asked, with such wild eyes that Silvia answered at Random:

"No; it is an accident. Nothing more dreadful than an accident."

The confusion and despair that reigned in that luxurious mansion was something terrible to remember, impossible to forget. Doctors, servants, friends, all in the wildest confusion, but there was nothing to be done. Lady Ianthe had been dead for hours.

While the earl was alone with his wife trying his best to comfort and console her, Silvia stole back to the room where the beautiful, silent figure was lying.

She unfastened the golden chain from the white neck, and, with the wedding-ring, took it away. She kissed the lovely face, so glorious in its marble beauty.

"I will keep your secret for you, dear," she said—"the secret of your most unhappy love."

Then it occurred to her that she had better go at once to Mr. Raymond, and tell him what had passed before he had an opportunity of hearing it from others. Now that the young life had ended, it seemed to Silvia that she ought to take every precaution that the secret for which she had died should be kept.

In the hurry and confusion it was not probable that any one would notice her absence, and she knew that if those dead lips could have spoken, their first command would have been "Go to him."

She left the house unnoticed and unobserved. She went again to the cab stand, and told a driver to take her to Grosvenor Street.

Mr. Raymond was still at home—it was not much after noon. The confusion, the terror, the dismay, that take so long to describe, were soon over; the death of our nearest and dearest often passes in the shortest space of time.

The landlady looked at her a trifle more dubiously this time; it seemed to her there must be something strange in this speedy return.

"You want Mr. Raymond again?" she said. "He is in his room; he has finished breakfast, and is going out, I think."

Silvia went to the breakfast-room.

"Come in," said the voice she remembered so well; but when she did enter the room, that gentleman regarded her with no very pleasant expression of face.

"Mrs Rymer," he said; "a most unexpected visit."

Silvia was in no humor for wasting words.

"I am far more sorry to come," she said, "than you can possibly be to see me."

She threw back her veil, for the very air of the room seemed oppressive to her. He saw the white face, with its expression of anguish and terror.

"Another complication," he said, "what has happened now?"

"The best thing possible for you," she replied bitterly, "and the worst for her."

"What is it?" he asked, impatiently.

Silvia laid the little golden chain, with the wedding-ring on it, before him.

"Lady Ianthe will trouble you so more," she said, solemnly. "You are free to marry, to woo, to love as you will."

His face lighted with satisfaction.

"She has decided wisely," he said; "it is painful, but it is the wisest course."

"Lady Ianthe did not decide as you think," replied Silvia, with ill concealed contempt; "she was more indignant than ever I can describe that you should dare to hint at such a proceeding to her. Whatever you may say she considered the marriage binding before God and man. She would not hear of anything else."

The handsome face grew pale, and an impatient frown came over the broad brow.

"What does she intend to do, then? What does she propose?"

"She proposes nothing," replied the solemn voice; "she means to do nothing. She has left you free."

"I cannot understand you, Mrs. Rymer. I am not good at puzzles."

"Your letter killed her," said Silvia.

"It was her death warrant."

He sunk back white and breathless.

"You cannot mean to say that Lady Ianthe is dead?"

"I mean what I say," said Silvia; "your letter killed her. When she most needed your love, when she most relied upon it, when it stood between her and despair, when it was her only hope and refuge, you took it from her, and made the barest proposal man ever made."

He did not offer to stop that torrent of indignant words.

"You forget she was a pure, proud woman, mistaken in her love for you, but in every other respect worthy of a man's most devoted love. You forgot that when you made such an insulting proposal to her."

"Dead!" he repeated. "Mrs. Rymer I cannot believe it. How did she die?"

He asked the question in fear and trembling, she saw that.

"Her death, as the great and fatal event of her life—her unfortunate marriage must remain a secret between us," she said. "The world will think she took an overdose of medicine—I tell you she poisoned herself."

"Poisoned herself!" he gasped. "Oh Mrs. Rymer, it cannot be!"

"It is the truth," she replied; and then she gave him the history of her night's conversation—her pleading, her entreaties; she did not spare him one single word. She told him everything Lady Ianthe had said, and no compassion for him arose in her heart, when she saw the tears in his eyes.

"So that you see," she continued, "your letter killed her: it drove her mad, and she destroyed herself. You failed her in her hour of utmost need, and that failure has slain her."

She felt no pity for him even when he bowed his head on his hands and wept most passionate tears.

THE OLD LADY KNEW IT ALL.

A traveller once put up for the night with a simple-minded old couple in a lonely farm-house. As he rode up to the door he heard the old woman say, in a tone of deep conviction:

"There! I knowed somebody'd come before night, for I dropped my fork on the floor, this morning, and it stuck straight up. Then I dropped the dish cloth at noon—another sure sign of company."

In entering the house the visitor carelessly struck his foot against the step, and came near falling.

"Ah!" said the old lady, quickly, "which toe did you stub, the right or the left?"

"The right," was the reply.

"That's good; it's a sure sign you're going where you are wanted. Pa, shoo that rooster off the fence. If he crows there, it will rain before morning."

A little boy ran into the room, crying out:

"Oh, grandma, look! Here's a copper I found in the road."

"I'm not a bit surprised. Don't you remember, Tommy, that you dreamed of finding a nest of hen's eggs last night? I told you then that you'd find some money before a week."

A young woman was washing on a porch back of the house, and the old lady cried out:

"There, there, Susan, if you haven't splashed soapsuds all over the front of your dress! And if you don't get a drunken husband for it I'm wonderfully mistaken. I've known that sign to come true often, and often. But you can keep it from coming true by hanging all the clothes on the line wrongside out, and you'd better do it."

So Susan did, as the traveller noticed, to his great amusement.

Suddenly Prostrated.

GENTLEMEN,—I was suddenly prostrated while at work by a severe attack of cholera morbus. We sent at once for a doctor, but he seemed unable to help. An evacuation about every forty minutes was fast wearing me out, when we sent for a bottle of Wild Strawberry, which cured my life. MRS. J. N. VAN NAVRAS,

DEATH OF MR. ROBERT JACKSON.

THE SUN of last week contained a brief notice of the death of Mr Robert Jackson, jr.

The deceased gentleman (for such he was in name and deed) was born in the township of Mono on the 5th day of October 1849, and resided in the same township until his sad death a week ago Tuesday. On the Sunday previous Mr. Jackson was attending divine worship at the Herald Angel church, Cardwell, when he was stricken down by congestion in its severest form. He was immediately removed to his home and everything that a loving wife, kind friends and the best medical attendance could do was done, but to no effect, death taking place at the time mentioned above. The deceased had not an enemy in the wide world, and he was everywhere spoken of in none but the kindest terms. He was a member of the A. O. U. W. and Orange orders, the members of which attended the funeral. The remains were interred in the Forest Lawn cemetery on Thursday and were followed to their last resting place by a cortege consisting of two hundred vehicles.

A wife and four children—three sons and a daughter—along with the respected parents of the deceased, we extend THE SUN'S warmest sympathy in their sad bereavement.

OUR MARKET FOR EGGS.

When the McKinley Bill was introduced, remarks the Ottawa Citizen, a Canadian cheese shipper happened to be in England, and thinking he saw a chance for a good thing in eggs, he made an arrangement with a prominent produce commission house for direct shipment of eggs. On his return to Canada he shipped a few cases, and the result has been so satisfactory, both as regards price and the condition in which the eggs arrived, that he is now buying all the eggs he can get for shipment to Great Britain, and his example will doubtless be soon followed by many others. The beginning is small, but it is foolish to despise small things. The first shipment of cattle to Great Britain, barely fifteen years ago, was only about a score. The shipments this year will probably reach 100,000 head. The demand for eggs in Great Britain is almost unlimited, and as there is no difficulty in keeping eggs for months in good condition, there is every reason to believe that Canada will be able to find a good paying market in Great Britain for every egg kept out of the American market by the McKinley Bill, and more, too, if we have them to sell.

SOME RESULTS OF THE N. P.

A FEW results of the National Policy, as predicted by Sir Leonard Tilley in his budget speeches, as summarized by the Montreal Gazette, and first as to the adverse balance of trade. In the six years ending 1879, the value of goods entered for consumption in Canada was $609,597,000, and the value of exports $474,895,000, giving a balance of trade against the country of $134,702,000, or an annual average of $22,450,000. In the ten year period ending with 1889, the value of goods entered for consumption was $1,027,923,000, and the value of exports $921,229,000, giving an averse balance of $106,694,000, or an annual average of only $10,669,000. Sir Leonard said that the deposits in the Government savings banks were augmenting at the rate of $400,000 a month, and that the increase would continue under the operation of the new fiscal policy. Result:—The aggregate deposits have grown from $9,207,600 in 1879 to $40,855,000 in 1889, a gain of $31,000,000, or nearly three millions annually, while in the five years preceding 1879 the deposits were stationery. He declared that the N. P. would increase our purchases from Great Britain and check the drift of trade to the United States. Result:—The imports into Canada from Great Britain, which declined from $68,522,000 in 1873 to $50,993,000 in 1879 rose four years later to $52,025,000, and were in 1889 $42,317,000. On the other hand our imports from the United States which amounted to $43,739,000 in 1879, were ten years after $50,637,000, an expansion of $6,800,000, as against an expansion of $11,300,000 in purchases in Great Britain. He predicted that the duty on coal would enlarge the sales of the Nova Scotia mines by nearly a million tons. Result:—The sales in 1879 were 688,500 tons, and in 1889 they amounted to 1,600,000 a literal fulfilment of the prophecy. He promised that the general condition of trade would be vastly improved, and the long era of depression ended. Result:—In the five year period, 1875-9, the aggregate liabilities of traders who failed were $133,138,000, or an annual average of $26,627,000, while in the ten year period, 1880-9, the aggregate liabilities of insolvents has been $121,106,000, or an annual average of only $12,110,000. He declared that the cotton industry was bound to make rapid strides under the protective policy, and that prices of cotton manufactures would be reduced. Result:—An increase in the importation of raw cotton from 9,720,700 pounds in 1876 to 39,223,600 pounds in 1889, or more than four-fold in the decade, while the price of the goods never was so low in Canada as now.

ALGIE AND WARD WON.

McCallum Held Responsible in the Flood Case.

The action brought by Algie Bros. and B. Ward, of Alton, against the township of Caledon for damages sustained by the great flood at Alton last fall was decided by Justice MacMahon in the common pleas division at Osgoode hall yesterday. It will be remembered that this case was tried at the Dufferin assizes this spring. This morning's papers contain the following:

Judgment in actions tried without a jury at Orangeville. Actions for damages for injuries occasioned to the plaintiffs' mills and dams upon the River Credit by the alleged negligence of the defendants in consenting to the highway being used as a reservoir and causing and permitting a dangerous volume of water to accumulate thereon. Judgment for the plaintiffs, with a reference to the master at Orangeville under sec. 100 of the Judicature Act as to damages. Judgment for the defendants against the third parties defendants for the amount of any such damages and costs as may be paid by them to the plaintiffs, together with their own costs as between party and party. E. Myers (Orangeville) for the plaintiff Ward. W. L. Walsh (Orangeville) for the plaintiff Algie. Osler, Q. C., Hoskin, Q. C., and T. Langdon for the defendants. J. Reeve, Q. C., for the third parties defendants.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE United Kingdom, with its 35,000,000 population, has 28 348 medical practitioners, or one to 1,234. In Germany there are 30,000 doctors, in France 11,995, and in the United States 100,000.

WHEN Yankee actresses have their diamonds stolen the papers now announce the fact without mentioning any names. This is a step in the right direction. It is full time the stage caught up with the soap men in the matter of novelty in advertising.

THERE must be something radically wrong with the machinery that supplys this town with electric light, judging by the flickering of the lamps for the past few weeks. The lights burn steady for a few seconds and then in the twinkling of an eye produce all shades of the rainbow. Some lamps, we are told, hardly ever burn, and the ratepayers on a certain street are becoming disgusted with Chairman Ketchum's management of affairs. If Ald Ketchum wants to retain his seat at the "green table" he should brace up and watch the taxpayers' interests a little more closely. The citizens are beginning to think that they are entitled to that which they dearly pay for, and THE SUN is with them every time.

THE reports as to the failure of the potato crop in Ireland, and the apparance of what is known as "famine fever" in that country, may bring to the recollection of a few in Galt the terrible times of the years between '45 and '49, when poor half starved Irish emigrants sought our shores by the thousand, many of them only reaching points inland to be stricken down with the burning ship fever that scarcely ever left its victim save with life. The emigrant sheds in Galt during those years stood on the hill a little nearer the road than where the Collegiate Institute now stands, and they were scarcely erected before they commenced to fill up with unfortunates in all stages of disease and misery. The then village did what was possible for the poor, afflicted people, and acts of kindness were the rule, but every day brought accession to the number, as, alas! nearly every day saw the same dismal scene of a gloomy funeral just at dusk. Where the remains were buried the writer has forgotten, but during two of the three years mentioned many a sturdy Irishman with his rich brogue, many a poor mother with but little thought save of "the childer," and many a little prattler itself, closed their eyes for ever in these old sheds. After 1848 the emigration largely decreased, and the sheds were torn down, and in the town to-day there are but few who remember the tragic scenes which took place even in Canada during the years of the terrible Irish famine.—Galt Reporter.

Mr. Dan McNeil, of Van Vlack, at the mouth of the Nottawasaga river, came to Shelburne on Tuesday to consult Mr B. Cole, who makes a specialty of curing stammering. Mr. McNeil was a very bad stutterer and we understand that he was cured inside of twenty minutes. He was so well pleased with the cure that he gave Mr. Cole a five dollar bill.

Hawkins Bros.' saw mill, Violet Hill, was destroyed by fire Monday morning about four o'clock, together with the machinery and other contents. There was no insurance, and the loss to the owners is a serious one. It appears the machinery had been sold to an Owen Sound man, who had paid $300 on the bargain, the machinery to be delivered in a few days, after certain logs had been cut. The fire is supposed to have been started by a tramp.

A NEW ERA.—Buttermilk is sold in Orangeville hotels. To what an alarming extent must the old familiar forty-rod of Orangeville have deteriorated that its inhabitants have now got down to putting up 5 cents for a glass of buttermilk in preference.—Alliston Herald.

THE CITIZENS' BAND.—The Citizens' band held its semiannual meeting in the band room last Thursday evening. After transacting some routine business the following officers were elected: J. A. McMaster, president; Geo. Presley, treasurer; J. H. Hulse, secretary; J. Presley, bandmaster; A. Jones, W. Hill J. J. Gahan, Executive committee.

THE SICK.—Mr. George Robinson is confined to his bed with malarial fever, and is, we are sorry to learn, very low. Squire McKinnon is suffering from an attack of sciatic, his wife, who has been very ill for some time past, has not gained in strength. Mr. George Siggins, of John street, is improving. Mr. Chittick and daughter, who have been down with typhoid fever, are recovering.

Y. P. A. OFFICERS.—The following officers were elected at a recent meeting of the Y. P. A. of St. Andrew's church: Rev D. C. Hossack, honorary president; J. A. Aiken, president; Miss Jennie Sproule, secretary; J. B. Adamson, treasurer; Miss K. Sutherland, auditor. A business meeting of the society was held on Tuesday evening and the first literary meeting of the season will be held in the basement of the church on Tuesday evening, Sept. 9.

A SERIOUS KICK.—On Tuesday of last week while the nine year old son of Mr. John Barefoot, of East Garafraxa, was leading a horse to water the animal suddenly turned around and kicked the boy in the face, head and different parts of the body, rendering him unconscious for some little time. The boy was carried to the house and medical attendance summoned from Orangeville. The injured lad is improving, but the doctor says he is not yet out of danger.

NEARLY CHOKED.—While a young man named Owen Garvey, a resident of Mono, was eating his dinner at a certain hotel in town yesterday a rather large piece of roast beef got stuck in his throat, and before it could be removed he was pretty black in the face. His friends took him outside the hotel and pounded his back until one would think it would cave in under the great strain. At last the meat was dislodged and shortly afterwards the youth left for home.

PROGRESS OUT WEST.—The Brampton Times is responsible for the following item: As an example of the rapid progress made by enterprising men in our great north west, Mr. John Smith who has just returned, says he met a Mr. Sanderson there, who was a hired man some few years ago in this section, has now 1,800 acres of wheat besides 300 acres of other grain. The vast expanse of grain which meets the eyes on these prairies is a sight never to be forgotten.

THE LOCROSE AND CHAMPIONS.—The Locrose lacrosse club of Mt. Forest have again won the championship of the northwestern district. On Tuesday the Mt. Forest boys defeated the Shelburne club at the former place by four games to one. Shelburne did not intend to go to Mt. Forest, but the Foresters, anxious to have a full string of victories, very generously presented Shelburne with $15 for coming. The standing of the clubs is: Mt. Forest, won 6, lost 0; Shelburne, won 4, lost 2; Orangeville, won 1, lost 5; Fergus, won 1, lost 5.

NEW SALVATION ARMY TUNE.—The Salvation Army has adopted the tune of "Little Annie Rooney" to the words of "She's my sweetheart, I'm her beau; she's my Annie, I'm her Joe," have been translated for the purposes of the army to read:

He's my Jesus, He's my Lord;
He's my Saviour, He's my God.

Some people may have an idea that this is a bit sacrilegious, but the army believes in anything to save sinners, and so everything goes.

A NOVEL TRAP.—A farmer's wife recently set a novel trap for rats. She took a wash boiler and filled it about half full of water and sprinkled a quantity of oats over the top. She then placed the trap in the barn and fixed things so as the rats could easily get at it. The average rat has as much curiosity as a woman is said to have, and of course they had to take a peep into the boiler, and then get down on the innocent looking oats to see if they were the ordinary every-day kind. The result was forty two drowned rats the first night.

THE MELANCHOLY DAYS.—Now comes the saddest time of the year when mothers watch and quake with fear by little cots and cribs and beds whereupon lie Johnnys, Bills and Neds. The darlings have been indiscreet and tackled food unfit to eat. Ah! Bare away yo midnight lamps! Light up the scene! Shine on the cramps! Then when day begins to dawn, and mothers sleep all white and wan, forth go the cramps, forgetting pain, to tackle unripe fruit again. Come draw the sympathetic tear! This is the saddest time of the year!—Exchange.

GRAND ORGAN RECITAL.—The magnificent Pipe Organ, the workmanship of Tye & Sons, of Toronto, is now in its place in the Methodist church, and is to be opened by a grand recital and concert, on Thursday evening, Sept. 4th. Several of Toronto's favorite singers will assist the choir of the church, and our citizens may look for the greatest musical event in Orangeville's history. Mr. A. N. Tyr, organist Trinity church Toronto will act as organist. The committee have decided not to charge for tickets more than 25 cents, so that all can avail themselves of the unusual treat.

A HAPPY EVENT.—A fashionable wedding took place at Camilla on Tuesday evening at seven o'clock at the Presbyterian church, when Mr. Peter Turnbull, of Park Rapids, Minn., son of Mr. Thos. Turnbull, of Mono, was married to Miss Ellen, daughter of Mr. John Large, of Amaranth. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. D. C. Hossack, of Orangeville. After the marriage, the party drove to the residence of the bride's father, where justice was done to a splendid spread. A large number of friends and acquaintances were present and a most enjoyable evening was spent. The young couple left Wednesday morning on a tour to the eastern states.

A NEW FOUNDRY.—At last Orangeville shows signs of awakening from its long and peaceful slumbers in the manufacturing line. Last week Mr. Thos. Stevenson let the contract for the erection of two large buildings to be used by J. A. McMaster in which to manufacture the far-famed Turnbull binder. It will take ninety thousand brick to complete the structures, and building operations will be commenced at once. They will occupy the old woolen mill site with a handsome three story building, the dimensions of which are 66 x 60 feet, and behind this they intend building a moulding shop 40 x 60. Mr. McMaster intends to manufacture two hundred machines next year.

ANOTHER SWINDLE.—Another swindle is on foot for the special benefit of the agricultural community, says the Wiarton Echo. A firm advertising under the style and title of McDonald, Howard &Co., woolen manufacturers and importers are sending circulars all over Canada to the farming community, offering to supply woolen goods a fabulously low price. They have agents out in every direction and are anxious to sell not for cash but for notes payable in three or six months. The exact location of their advertised places of business is difficult to find, but the notes always turn up all right, and have to be paid and the profits instead of being similar to those in legitimate business are as large as an elephant. Let our farmers be on the alert for agents of this class and give them the boot directly they announce their business.

DEATH OF REV. A. STEELE.—The Rev. Alex. Steele, father of the head master of our high school, died at Port Stanley, county of Elgin, on Thursday the 21st instant. He had reached the advanced age of eighty seven years. Mr. Steele was a native of Perthshire, Scotland, and received his early training at the high school of Perth. His literary and theological training were received at the university of St. Andrews, where he had the pleasure of attending the lecture in moral philosophy of Dr. Chambers. For many years Mr. Steele had charge of the church of Gaeland Assembly school at Raspbord. In the year 1843 he came to America and remained a year in Nova Scotia, he then came on to Canada west, as it was called, and became the settled pastor of the Presbyterian congregation at Beamsville. For the last forty years he has resided in Elgin Co., following the occupation of farming, of which he was very fond.

QUICK WORK.—Shortly before the town bell chimed the hour of 12 o'clock on Saturday poor old Jimmy Todd, who is his own worst enemy, walked up Broadway, shouting that he could wipe up the dust with any man in town. He pulled off his coat as he made this startling declaration, but his challenge remained unaccepted. Chief Shields appeared to be very anxious about Jimmy's welfare and evidently didn't want Todd's challenge to go abroad, for he nabbed him and walzed the unfortunate Jimmy up to P. M. Pattullo's law-dispensing shop. The large-hearted P. M., as a token of remembrance, presented Jimmy with ten days free board at "Castle" Sutherland. "Yes, give me ten days," exclaimed Jimmy to the cadi in a fit of anger, "and when I come out there will be a spot on your nose for every day I have served!" And the whole business occupied less than five minutes. Pretty quick work, gentlemen.

Mr. Hunter, of the 2nd line, Amaranth, has added a new brick kitchen to his house. He intends to make further improvements next year. Mr. H. is an enterprising young man and deserves great credit for his pluck.

SALEM.

Things in general are very lively around Salem of late.

Harvesting is pretty well over around here and threshing is the order of the day.

Our school teacher, Miss Henderson, has resumed her duties for the next six months.

The present incumbent of the civic chair, Mr. Hugh Dodds, who has been enshrouded with the garments of office for the past three years, will have a heavy contest next January to retain his lease of public life, for it is said on excellent authority, that Mr. Henry White is in the field for that honorable position. Bill Nelson is our Justice of the Peace, and Charley Scott is seriously thinking of retiring from farming and starting a wood and coal yard in our flourishing hamlet.

ECHOES.

My threshing came off quieter this year than it did in the year previous, if I hadn't broken my democrat.—Bill Nelson.

The boys thought they were giving it to me pretty hard at Dodds' threshing about Miss B., but I have $50 to spend over the matter to see it settled.—J. J. White.

Well, boys, if there is $50 to be spent over this case my salary won't stand it, but I think the boss will go my bail.—J. Hadden.

Never mind, boys, opposition is the life of trade.—Bob Dodds.

I am very sad and lonely now.—Joe Pearson.

I am the boy can fork barley all the same.—J. Fleming.

What's the cause of all this racket, any way?—J. Armstrong.

A BUCKINGHAM SENSATION.

Cannibalism in the Ottawa District—Two Idiotic Boys Devour Their Baby Brother—A Terrible Story.

OTTAWA, August 23.—From Buckingham comes an awful story of cannibalism. Paul Cote, a French-Canadian miner, and Elisha Newton, a farmer, are neighbors, living in a small settlement on the Du Lievre, about two days' journey from Buckingham. The Cote family consisted of the man, his wife, and their baby boy about a year old. Newton is the father of two boys who are deaf mutes and of unsound mind. Occasionally the idiots had exhibited signs of a vicious disposition, but as their parents were averse to sending the unfortunates to an asylum they were kept at home, and, being regarded as perfectly harmless, they were allowed the freedom of their neighbors house, which they visited frequently. Several days Mrs. Cote went berry picking, intending to return in couple of hours, leaving her baby in charge of the deaf mutes. When the mother returned to the house the sight that met her gaze was simply indescribable. The babe was fearfully torn: Its cheeks had been literally eaten to the bone, and the flesh partly devoured from one side of the neck. The gory faces of the grinning idiots, still gloating with their prey, showed all too plainly that they had literally eaten the child alive, for it died in a few moments after the mother discovered the fearful act. Carrying the head baby in her arms Mrs. Cote ran to the Newton's home, and told the miserable parents of the terrible occurrence. Hardly could they credit her story, but on returning to fetch the wretched lads away, the evidence of the awful facts were but too vividly apparent. The maniacs will probably be sent to an asylum.

Poetry.

THE FAIR THEOSOPHIST.

She cares not for the earthly things
That entertain the rest of us;
She soars, on spiritual wings,
Far, far above the rest of us!
She smiles, but yet declines to mix
With dissident apology,
In mothers' meetings, politics,
Lawn tennis or theology.

Complacent, self-possessed and cool,
Though curates come soliciting,
She will not teach the Sunday school,
Nor venture district visiting.
On church bazaars she sets no store,
Nor tickles our hilarity
By singing "Ask a Policeman!" for
The sacred cause of charity.

So elevated is her mind
This life is far too tough for her,
And orthodoxy cannot find
A heaven good enough for her.
She asks and we forgive the sin,
In charming femininity,
She asks to be a Chela in Thibet or the vicinity.

THE TWO GRAVES.

Together, they lie on the lonely plain,
In the driving sleet and the drenching rain,
When the nights are dark in the dreary pines,
Or hushed in solemn the moonlight shines
The self-same flowers above them wave;
The same birds chirrup from grave to grave;
And the sunshine, sweet, is the same that is shed
By the gracious giver o'er both the dead.

One had his birth in the north afar,
Where moans the fir to the midnight star.
There, at the foot of that gray old hill,
His widowed mother awaits him still.
Husband and daughters and sons are gone,
Stricken and broken she watches alone,
Daily she goes to the time-worn door
To watch for her youngest, who comes no more.
For the tall, straight form and the fair, proud head
That have lain for years with the nameless dead.

One had his home where the rice fields blow,
And the dark palmettos their palm leaves show,
His bride, his darling, the wife of a day,
Has watched and waited till her hair is gray,
And never a line has she had, to tell
If he died at once where he fought and fell;
Or lingered, forgotten, through sun and rain
Through nights of anguish and days of pain—
Alas! no voice from the dead can come
To that broken heart, to that stricken home.

Together, they lie on the lonely plain,
Never to struggle and suffer again.
They have gone to a land, where the rush and roar
And thunder of battle are heard no more.
Where they sleep so calm, in a peace so deep,
That they do not know that their loved ones
weep,
And the snows may drive, and the winds may rave,
And the rains beat wild on each nameless
grave,
Yet they heed no sounds from the angry past
Together, as brothers, they sleep at last

This is an Italian bon mot. At a cafe a group of gentlemen discussing politics, a young student entered and joined in the conversation; his arguments did not please the others, and one of them said to him, "Be quiet! At your age I was an ass myself!" "You are wonderfully well preserved, sir," was the reply.

The Sleep of the Just.

FOR sleepless nights, depending on worry, vexation, indigestion, etc., Burdock Blood Bitters is a remarkably efficient cure. "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters for sleepless nights and now sleep well all night. I recommend it to all suffering from imperfect rest."
Geo. H. Smith, Stony Creek, Ont.

"True politeness is the flowering of a great and noble mode of living," yet many people mistake the exact performance of the rules of social etiquette, for politeness. In no country of the world are gentlemen so universally polite to the opposite sex as in America, the most unconventional of all countries, and no man is at heart so truly impolite to, and contemptuous of women as the Frenchman, who is versed in all the rules of etiquette. The Frenchman considers woman an inferior creature, and in his heart of hearts thinks of her much in the same way as does the Oriental. The Englishman is polite to women except those of his own family, to whom he is often a tyrant. The American gentleman is polite to all women, to the shop girl who serves him at the counter, as well as the hostess who entertains him at her table, or in her parlor.

Crop Reports Throughout Canada—Europe Will Want Many Millions of Bushels of Wheat—[illegible]

Toronto.

Toronto, Aug. 24.—Reports from all over the country show that the crops are [illegible] are pretty well [illegible] in many sections local [illegible] fairly good. Potatoes, however seem to have suffered generally as in many parts of the country they are reported as very much under the average. All root crops are reported as being only fair. More rain seems to be needed in many sections. Fruit in Western Ontario and other parts is reported as being a poor crop, although samples are good. Peas and corn are average crops, while hay is very heavy. In Manitoba enormous crops are reported. The yield of wheat is stated to be literally millions of bushels. The yield in some portions is [illegible] 40 or 50 bushels per acre. The barley and oat crop is also very large, and the amount of grain to be harvested this year will be immense. This is very satisfactory news for us Canadians, in view of the fact that the Old World wheat crop is below the average. Latest despatches from England state that the net yield in Great Britain is only 21,101,000 bushels, and the total yield in Europe 2,313,000,000 bushels, leaving an estimated deficiency of 1,158,000,000 bushels to be drawn from Canada the United States and elsewhere. With this news verified wheat should have an upward tendency in price. It is stated that potatoes also will be a great demand and already prior to the coming winter, as most alarming reports have been received from Europe regarding the crop. Ireland is feared will be visited by a terrible famine, and the scenes of 1846-48 and even of a later date may be repeated. The potato crop is regarded as an almost total failure, particularly all through the northwest and western districts.

Much damage was done the other day by a big fire which destroyed Scott & Cross' Lumber yard in this city. The loss was about $20,000. Seven houses were partially destroyed.

The color line seems to be going a little too far in Canada. The other day Rev. A. W. Jordon, the colonial pastor of a church in Halifax, a most respectable and distinguished man was ordered to take a separate table in the restaurant attached to the Intercolonial Railway Station at Amherst. He was not allowed to sit at the public table, or eat with white folks. Some people seem to think that this is stretching things too far. Mr. Jordan has raised a row, and has entered an action against the proprietor.

Collingwood, Ont., had her Civic holiday festivities interrupted, the beginning of last week. A fire broke out in the old market building. The new Town Hall just completed was totally wrecked. It cost some $22,000. Other buildings were also burnt. Two Orillia and St. Alford fire brigades who were in the town on a visit, rendered valuable assistance.

Friday last presented the curious aspect of a day when fasting was not obligatory upon Catholics. The feast of the Assumption fell on that day, and the Pope therefore granted a special dispensation. No one fasted.

A splendid procession of fat stock is now on its way from Manitoba to England. Fifteen cars, holding 300 head of cattle were shipped last week and preparations are now going on to ship the more than [illegible] of stock in twenty-eight cars. The freight alone was valued at $[illegible],000.

Conventions and meetings have been in all their glory last week. The Dominion Alliance and the Royal Templars of Temperance met in Toronto. The latter lined it this day a year. The Montreal team could not do their own shooting match on Saturday, as their range was used, but they were all for down to have some of taking a place in the first fifteen.

The first annual business meeting will be held at Ottawa during the D. R. A. week. Much comment has been caused by some of the extraordinary scores seen in headquarters by competing teams, especially in the best match shot. The 13th Batt. Hamilton, for instance, a score of 980 out of a possible 1,000 or an average of 98.0 for the ten men. The Sherbrooke, Bowmanville, and Windsor Mills, P. Q., teams have also sent in some wonderful scores. Much comment is being caused by this phenomenal shooting, which some papers are calling ugly names.

A DANGER SIGNAL!
A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not for an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh across of eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the droppings into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

NASAL BALM
INSTANTLY RELIEVES
Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

T. D. D. Loyd, 6 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the wonderful healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have persuaded myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to breathe and to speak freely. I shall not fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM
POSITIVELY CURES
CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect satisfaction of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cent for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

I'D MOURN THE HOPES THAT LEAVES ME.

I'd mourn the hopes that leave me,
If thy smiles had left me too;
I'd weep when friends deceive me,
Hadst thou been like them untrue.
But while I've thee before me,
With heart so warm, and eyes so bright,
No clouds can linger o'er me,
That smile turns them all to light.

'Tis not in fate to harm me,
While fate leaves thy love to me;
'Tis not in joy to charm me,
Unless joy be shar'd with thee.
One minute's dream about thee
Were worth a long and endless year
Of waking bliss without thee,
My own love, my only dear!

And, the hope be gone, love,
That long sparkled o'er our way,
O! we shall journey on, love,
More safely, without its ray,
Far better light shall win me,
Along the path I've yet to roam;
The mind, that burns within me,
And pure smile from thee at home.

Thus, when the lamp that lighted
The traveller, at first goes out
He feels awhile benighted
And looks round in fear and doubt.
But soon, the prospect clearing,
By cloudless star light on he treads,
And thinks no lamp so cheering
As that light which heaven sheds!

CHAPTER XLIV.

A LETTER FROM THE DEAD.

SILVIA sat watching Clifford Raymond in silence.

"It is a great pity," she said, "that one spark of that compassion did not animate you before."

"Do not be hard on me, Mrs. Rymer," he said; "I am wretched enough God knows. I did not expect this, nor did I ever dream it would happen."

"A man never knows where his evil deeds will end," said Silvia. "Yours began when you persuaded Lady Ianthe to take that most foolish step of a private marriage; the most cruel deed was when you wrote her that letter. If I had known its contents, I would have burned both my hands off before I would have touched it. How could you do it?"

"Do not reproach me," he cried; "I shall never know another happy moment—my life is all ruined."

"You do not deserve happiness," said Silvia. "Your life is no more valuable than the one your cruelty has destroyed. If you were happy, Heaven would not be just."

"But I am not alone in being what you call wicked," he said. "Why am I so severely punished?"

"Do not ask me questions that will be answered for you in another world," she said. "All that you can suffer will be as nothing in comparison with the anguish that brought Lady Ianthe to her death."

He turned, shuddering away; but she saw him take the ring and slip it on his finger; then she rose from her seat.

"I must go now," she said. "I shall be wanted. I came, Mr. Raymond, to tell you how strictly your cowardly wish shall be carried out—that the secret shall be most faithfully kept. Lady Ianthe made me take last night the most solemn oath that she could devise that I would never betray it, and I never will."

She could not help seeing the cowardly relief in his face.

"Do you know what she did with my letters?" he asked.

"No; but you may rely upon one thing: she who was careful over the secret has left no trace of it. Your letters are destroyed, you may take my word for it; but, to make doubly sure, I will look myself. Your ring is here. Your secret is safe. No one will ever know how Lady Ianthe loved or how she died."

He looked somewhat ashamed.

"Mrs. Rymer," he said, "did you read my letter?"

"Yes—I read it; and if I thought any good result could follow, I would tell you what I thought of it; but all reproach, all recrimination is vain."

"Thank you for sparing me," he said humbly.

"Do not thank me. If I could do poor Lady Ianthe the least good, I would pursue you until death; but I can not, and for her sake your secret will remain untold. I have no more to say. I can only hope that in this world we may meet again. I have no respect or liking for you."

With those words she left him, and it may be surmised that his reflections were not of the most agreeable kind. Silvia hastened to Dale House—she, had not been missed; the earl was still with his unhappy wife; the servants still in confusion. Outside the house several people had congregated. Rumors of the terrible tragedy had spread.

The beautiful Lady Ianthe Leeson, one of the belles of the season, one of the loveliest girls in London, had accidently poisoned herself—had taken an overdose of some medicine that contained strong poison.

As first people were incredulous. "It was impossible; it must be a false rumor; it could not be true: Lady Ianthe dead! Lady Ianthe poisoned! who could credit it?" Carriage after carriage dashed up to the door. One inquiry after another poured in, but Lord Leeson saw no one. All visitors were referred to Mrs. Rymer.

She had but one formula. "Lady Ianthe had unfortunately taken an overdose of medicine that contained a strong solution of prussic acid. She, either not knowing or not understanding the strength of it, had taken too much." No one doubted the story. So young, so beautiful, so highly gifted, sought in marriage, as every one knew she was, by one of the wealthiest peers in England, it was absurd to imagine anything wrong; indeed, the idea did not occur to any one. Sympathy, pity, condolences were lavished upon the unhappy family, but no one even hinted or suspected there was anything wrong.

When she could spare time, Silvia hastened to the room where all that was mortal of poor Lady Ianthe lay. She looked in the drawers, the desks, in every possible receptacle, but there was no sign of any letters.

"She destroyed them," thought Silvia; "few secrets have been better kept than hers."

Looking around, she found what she had not seen before—a note, addressed to Lord Monford. Would that contain a revelation of the secret or not? She held it in her hands. If in it the secret should be told, what despair and anguish would it not cause!

Still, she must deliver it. She took it to Lord Leeson, and told him she wanted to see him particularly. His haggard face almost frightened her.

"What do you want, Mrs. Rymer?" he asked, despairingly.

"I found this in Lady Ianthe's room, my lord, and I thought it my duty to bring it to you."

He took it from her hand, and read the address.

"To Lord Monford," he said. "If Lord Monford calls I will see him."

The words seemed to be almost prophetic. Silvia had not left him many minutes, before a message was brought, saying Lord Montford wished to see her at once in the library. When she went in, her whole heart yearned to him, his face was so sad, and so full of untold anguish.

"Mrs. Rymer," he said, in a broken voice, "I hardly dare to ask you if this awful news is true."

"Yes," she replied; "there is no use disguising one word of the truth."

"I have only just heard it," he continued; "and I think it will kill me. Only God knew how I loved her. Will you tell me how it happened?"

Keep the secret, Silvia, keep it still; if the man who loved her knew it, he would slay the man who betrayed her in her terrible need, and left her without the frailest plank between herself and the dark waters of ruin that ingulfed her.

Once more she went through the story. Lord Monford listened without comment. Looking up at him, suddenly, she read disbelief in his face.

"The earl wished to see you," she said simply. "Shall I tell him you are here?"

There was something touching in the silent grasp of the hand with which the two gentlemen met.

"You have heard?" said the earl, and he made no effort to disguise the tears.

"I have heard was the grave reply; "but I can not believe it yet. I am too shocked, too horrified, even to be able to think clearly. I left her quite well last night, and now they tell me she is dead."

"I can hardly realize it myself," said the earl, "though I know it to be true. Lord Monford, this was found in my daughter's room. Will you read it?"

Lord Monford took the note, opened it, and read it.

"Who told your daughter of the money transactions between us?" he asked sadly.

"Lady Leeson in the first instance—I mentioned them in the second."

"Perhaps it was only natural that you should do so. I hope, however, that it would not have influenced her. I do not quite understand the tone of her letter."

Lord Monford gave it to the earl, who read it.

"My dear Lord Monford," it ran, "I have only lately became aware of the money debt under which my dear father, the earl, lies to you. I have known nothing of his money troubles, and I regret it now. Life has only seemed to me like a pleasant dream; this is one of the stern realities I have never known. My lord, you have done me a great honor to say that you love me. For that love's sake I appeal to you. Be kind and generous to my dear father. I do not understand money matters, but my mother tells me if he were not compelled to pay this money at once he would in a few years' time retrieve his position. My lord, you say you love me—grant me the first favor I have ever asked from you—a grace that I solicit on my knees—do not call this money in until my father is ready to pay it. I have looked so often at your face lately; it is a kindly one; you can be generous, be generous to me. I urge my prayer upon you. I send it with you; wherever you may go I bid it follow you; and I have a firm hope, a sure conviction, that you will grant it."

Lord Leeson read the note through; then it fell from his hands to the floor.

"My darling!" he cried, "my dear, lost darling! I did not think she troubled so deeply over my misfortunes."

"Did she speak much of them?" asked Lord Monford.

"No; even though I explained them to her, I had no idea that she did not understand them. She had never once, during her whole life, heard the word trouble mentioned."

CHAPTER XLV.

A GENEROUS ACT.

Lord Monford took up the letter and read it again. "There are two ways of looking at this letter," he said. "Either your daughter loved me, and wanted this promise from me, this money affair settled before anything was said of love or marriage, or—"

He stopped short for a moment, and looked at the paper again. "Or," he continued, "she did not love me, and she has sooner embraced death than consent to be my wife. Which is it, Lord Leeson?"

"I can not tell you, indeed; you know quite as much of the affair as I do."

"But you know whether she looked upon my proposal favorably or not," said Lord Monford.

"Now the earl had certainly loved his daughter very dearly—no one more so; he was overwhelmed with grief at losing her, yet, through all his love and all his sorrow, he retained a keen instinct of his worldly interests. He was a gentle man, and would not speak falsely; at the same time he feared to compromise his interests.

"Why should she object to such an offer as yours?" he said. "You would have made her a good husband. You would have given her wealth, position—all that a woman wants or values; why, then, should she object?"

"I can not tell," he replied sadly. "Women are riddles."

"Even had she objected," continued the earl, "she most surely would have said so; we have been very kind indulgent parents to her. There was no attempt to force her inclinations. If she objected she had but to say so, and we should have complied with any wish she expressed. It would be absurd even to imagine that she would kill herself rather than be your wife. No alternative of any kind was placed before her."

"I am glad of that," said Lord Monford. "It was left, then, to her own free choice whether she married me or not?"

"My Lord Monford," replied the earl, "my daughter's choice could but be free. Dismiss all thoughts of anything else from your mind."

"Was she in the habit of taking this medicine?" he asked.

"I suppose so. The doctors say it is an accident that might have happened to any one. I do not understand why you take this morbid view of the case."

"I can not quite explain, even to myself," said Lord Monford. "I am haunted by a melancholy idea that if I had never made Lady Ianthe an offer of marriage she would be living still."

Lord Leeson raised his white face with an expression of heartfelt anguish.

"Do you think so? I can not see it; but if that suspicion should have even the least germ of truth in it, I join you in saying that the hour in which those proposals were made was the most unfortunate in my life or yours. She was my only child, and I loved her most dearly."

Lord Monford stood with the letter in his hands.

"People say," he said suddenly, "that I am a mercenary man—that I love money; it can not be true, for I would give all my wealth twice over, if such a thing could be, to restore this fair young life."

He spoke so earnestly, so sadly, that the earl felt every word was true. Lord Monford turned away with a long, deep sigh.

"The word money shall never be mentioned between us again," he said. "You are my debtor, it is true, to a large amount, and, perhaps, I was mercenary and cruel to think of making your indebtedness to me a reason why you should influence your daughter's love in my behalf. But I am punished for my sin, and the punishment is almost heavier than I can bear. Let it end here, Lord Leeson; I am not in want of the money. I shall give orders that it remain where it is, and, while I live, the payment of the interest will suffice; after my death—however, I will say no more; but there shall remain between us this understanding—that the repayment of that money shall never cost you one anxious moment."

The earl grasped Lord Monford by the hand.

"You are magnificently generous, my lord," he cried.

An expression of deep pain came over Lord Monford's face.

"Nay, I am not generous," he said; "If I had been, I should never have done as I did—made my love and my money one. I am anything but generous in this case. I am simply just. I asked for her love in payment, and she has given her life. I shall never divest myself of that idea."

"It is even more painful to me than to you," said the earl, and then Lord Monford rose, to intimate that the interview was over.

"I shall go abroad," he said, abruptly. "England, and London above all, will be most hateful to me. Perhaps, when I return, I may see you again."

The earl felt relieved. He would hardly have cared himself to meet the man, whom he honestly believed, say what he would, to be accountable for his daughter's death. He murmured some few words about the countess, but Lord Monford interrupted him.

"Give to the countess," he said, "my sympathy use words warm and kindly as you will, they will not express my meaning too kindly; my whole heart aches for Lady Leeson, in this her terrible loss."

And then Lord Monford went away. If he had only acted a few short weeks ago generously as he acted now, there would have been one great crime saved.

Neither Lord nor Lady Leeson kept up any appearance of reserve before Mrs. Rymer now—they spoke before her openly on all matters; she seemed almost to have taken the dead daughter's place. What they would have done without her in that house of mourning no one could tell. She was a gleam of sunshine, a ray of hope, an angel of consolation. She alone could control Lady Leeson when the intensity of her despair mastered her. She alone could utter a few words of comfort that brought something like ease and rest to the sorely-aching heart. She alone could speak of the beautiful dead girl in such terms, that even while her words caused the mother's tears to flow afresh, they brought some little solace to the burning pain that seemed to eat away life itself. She heard Lord Leeson relate to his wife the conversation he had just had with Lord Monford. Her heart ached as she listened; it seemed to her that this was exactly what she had imagined of him. Oh! if Lady Ianthe would but have appealed first to his generosity.

Yet, even then she would not have been saved. It was not because Lord Monford wished to marry her that she had died. It was her lover's perfidy that had killed her, and of this perfidy no living creature knew the secret except herself.

"Silvia, Silvia!" cried Lady Leeson, in her agony of despair, "you know all about it. Tell me, do you think it was through my importunity, my prayers, and my persuasions that my darling died?"

Silvia went to her; she tried to raise the crouching figure; she took the cold hands in hers.

"Will you believe me?" she said. "Lady Leeson, will you believe that you have no reason to blame yourself, no cause for remorse?—and I, who value truth so highly, would not say this to you if it were not true."

A cement which will adhere perfectly to glazed surfaces, repairs broken minerals, or in fact stick to anything, is made by taking two ounces of clear gum arabic, one and a half ounces of fine starch, one half ounce of white sugar. Pulverize the gum arabic, and dissolve it in as much water as the laundress would use for the quantity of the starch indicated. Dissolve the starch and sugar in the gum solution. Then cook the mixture in a vessel suspended in boiling water until the starch becomes clear. The cement should be as thick as tar and kept so. It can be kept from spoiling by dropping in a lump of gum camphor, or a little oil of cloves or sassafras.

They were having a kindergarten lesson. The teacher gave them very simple subjects for illustration. She touched a table. "What is this?" "Wood." "What is this?" she asked, as she touched the fender. "Iron." "What is this?" and she took up a bottle. "Glass." "What is this?" and she touched her watch chain. "Brass," said one small boy, and she changed the subject.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Some occupations tend to the development of certain diseases, and those who toil as miners are peculiarly liable to rheumatism, lumbago, and other allied complaints. In the gold-fields and copper mines Holloway's remedies have been largely patronized by the workers to their very great advantage, and they can be confidently recommended as invaluable remedies for inward congestions, spasms and cramps in the bowels, and all those conditions of the lungs and liver to which those who work underground or in impure atmospheres are so peculiarly liable. For cuts, bruises, sprains and stiffened joints, the action of Holloway's Ointment is exclusively healing and soothing, and a supply should always be at hand in case of need.

A PARTY of six or eight representative British farmers are reported to be en route for Canada, to inspect and report on this country as a field for the emigration of the agricultural classes in Britain. It will be remembered that a few years ago a party of Scotch tenant farmers visited these parts, remained a day or two in Stratford, and on returning to their native land, reported so favorably of this country, that several good farmers, with capital, were induced to come to this Province.

THE earl of Aberdeen, who arrived in Canada on Saturday, will spend some months at Durdurn Park, Hamilton. His lordship is spoken of as likely to succeed Lord Stanley of Preston as Governor-General in the event of the Liberals being in power in Great Britain when His Excellency's term expires. Lord Aberdeen is a Home Ruler. He was lord-lieutenant of Ireland under the last Gladstone administration, and enjoys the distinction of being the only British viceroy whose departure from Dublin was mourned by the masses of the Irish people.

"The success of this great work (the tunnel) is due to the engineering skill and ability of Joseph Hobson, chief engineer of the Great Western division of the Grand Trunk Railway, who conceived, planned and executed it, and who, under the greatest difficulties, had the most perfect confidence in the possibility of the work, as evidence by the great result. We feel all the more interest and pride in this result from the fact that Mr. Hobson belongs to Guelph township, where he received his rudimentary education under his old and respected teacher, Wm. Cowan, who, we feel sure, will unite with us in hearty congratulations at the success of the great work which his engineering skill has accomplished. Mr. Hobson's great abilities as an engineer have long been acknowledged and appreciated, and this crowning work of his professional career places him in the forefront of railway engineers on this continent. Mr. Hobson is a brother to John I. Hobson, reeve of Guelph township, and one of our most intelligent and successful farmers."—Guelph Mercury.

THE GOSSIP OF A WEEK.

COMING INDUSTRIAL EXHIBITION AT TORONTO.

Benwell—Burchell Case—Lord and Lady Aberdeen—Has Winnie at the Falls—Ontario and Dominion Rifle Matches—Convict Stabbed—The U. S. Tariff Bill.

TORONTO, Sept. 3.—It seems like vain repetition to say day after day that the great fair for 1890 will be the greatest of all the great fairs of the Industrial Exhibitions association. But it is almost upon us and the boom is going out and swelling to a mighty roar in the streets of the city and abroad in the land. The harvest is good and the farmers and villagers and townspeople from all parts of Ontario will flock to Toronto in the second and third weeks of September. The energetic Canadian agents of the great American railways have flooded the States of New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio with Exhibition literature, and a number of mammoth excursions from those States has been organized. So it is predicted fearlessly that the people will be here in hundreds of thousands. And they will see a great show. The number and variety of entries has never before been so great. The staff at the offices is larger this year than ever before and it still finds itself unable to overtake the arrears of work. The spaces in all the buildings has been engaged for weeks and arrangements have been made for the accommodation of the overflow in tents. It will be a great show.

On Sept. 8 the exhibition will be opened by the Earl of Aberdeen. It is expected that Prince George of Wales and the Governor-General with Lady Stanley of Preston and other members of the vice-regal family will visit Toronto next week to take in the big show.

Lord and Lady Aberdeen have just a rival in the country. Their children have been staying in Toronto for a week. The distinguished visitors have been staying in Montreal and Ottawa. They are now in Hamilton. After opening the Exhibition they will go back to Hamilton, where a villa has been rented, and where they hope to have a quiet rest. If for the winter sets in the Aberdeens will take a flying trip to the Pacific Coast. Rumour has it that Lord Aberdeen is to be our next Governor-General. It is somewhat early for such rumours, however as Lord Stanley has only served half his time.

The Ontario Rifle Association last week concluded a four days' meeting on Garrison Common. The shooting all round was good, and prize money big.

The following officers were elected for the current year, by the Council: President, Wm. Mulock, Esq., M. P., Toronto; Vice-Presidents, first military district, Lieut.-Col. Lewis, retired list, London; second military district, Lieut.-Col. Jones, Dufferin Rifles, Brantford; third military district, Major S. Hughes, Lindsay Warder, 45th battalion Lindsay; fourth military district, Lieut.-Col. Macpherson, militia staff, Ottawa; Treasurer, Lieut.-Col. Airgo, district paymaster, Toronto; Secretary, Capt. Mutton, Queen's Own Rifles, Toronto; Auditors, Capt. Geo. Bousser, Toronto; Capt. T. D. Delamere, Toronto.

This week will see every one who shoots at Ottawa, where the great Dominion matches are on.

Hollingworth, a convict in the Kingston Penitentiary, who is doing a 5 years sentence for stealing registered letters while a mail clerk, has been fatally stabbed by another convict. It is not expected that he will live.

This speaks badly for the management of the Penitentiary. That a convict could carry a large pair of scissors from a workshop to his cell and secrete them until he could make a murderous assault upon another prisoner is a strange thing in the same way Neil murdered a guard at the Central Prison some years ago. If this could be done in one case without detection why could not all the convicts so arm themselves and make a general slaughter on the guards? The man who did the stabbing is said to have been a good and inoffensive workman in the department, but was expected to be killed by the insults of the other. It was understood that the prisoners were not allowed to speak to each other, and this case shows that they can not only speak but that they can quarrel. For models of the prison see Nature, evidently assigns to reform a man but rather to intensify the evil when is in him.

The McKinley tariff bill now passing through the United States Congress, will it seems not work so much harm to Canadian interests as anticipated. The following shows the principal products sent from Canada to the United States last year: Barley, $6,454,000; Eggs, $2,157,000; Horses, $2,134,000; Sheep, $18,000; Hay, $82,000; Cattle, 488,000; Beans, 430,000; Peas, 313,000; Apples, 239,000; Potatoes, 135,000; Poultry, 111,000; Total $14,501,000.

Under the new tariff bill, which it is expected will become law on the first of October, the duty on barley will be increased from 10c. to 30c. per bushel; eggs, now admitted free, will be taxed 5c. per dozen; there will be a specific duty of $30 per head on horses and an ad valorem duty in addition of 30 per cent. on an value of over $150, and the duty on hay will be increased from $2 to $4 per ton.

Assuming our export of barley to the United States to be the same this year as last, the increase in the tax would be from $1,000,000 to $5,000,000. But the export will not be as great since the acreage sown this year was not 2,500,000 acres less and the estimated yield has been lessened by over 7,000,000 bushels. If our export of barley to the United States for 1890 bears the same proportion to the whole crop as did that of last year we will only send 5,000,000 bushels there and that can be marketed before the new duty takes effect. So that the principal blow aimed at Canadian trade will find nothing to fall upon.

The 72 jurors to be summoned to Woodstock for the Burchell trial have already been chosen. Woodstock Court House is a small building, and by the time the witnesses, newspaper men, artists, lawyers and County Council, with the friends of the Sheriff et al, get crowded in, there will be no room for outsiders to witness the sensational case.

It is reported around town that Joseph Bullock, who is confined in jail on a charge of criminally assaulting his sixteen-year-old stepdaughter, Jamie Batty, is to be married to his victim.

Inspector Archibald, Toronto's morality inspector studied the statutes to find out whether such a marriage would be unlawful, but the law is silent on the point.

Hon. J. W. Longley, the Attorney General of Nova Scotia is in town, the guest of Prof. Goldwin Smith. Erastus Wiman, the annexationist or free trader from New York has also been here for a few days. This star combination invaded Niagara Falls last week to address a monster meeting of Canadian farmers on the advantages of reciprocity, unrestricted and otherwise. According to reports, very few farmers were present, the audience being composed in the main of ladies.

BOUND AND BURIED.—The vital statistics for August, as registered at the town clerk's office, are; marriages, 1; deaths, 5.

TRY GEORGETOWN.—The Erin Advocate man got Orangeville and Georgetown all mixed up last week. He says: Thos. Watkins, an old Englishman, with a wooden leg, was found dead at the Biggar House, Orangeville, recently.

THOSE UNWELL.—Mr. Geo Robinson, whom we reported as being seriously ill last week, is, we are sorry to say, not improving. Mr. George Siggins, who has been very sick for some time past, is rapidly recovering. Mr. P. McCabe is slowly improving.

NEW LAW FIRM.—Mr. T. C. West, formerly of this town but now of Calgary, N. W. T., has taken Mr. Jas. Muir, Q. C., formerly of Fergus, into partnership in the law business. THE SUN delights in chronicling Orangeville boys' prosperity. It therefore wishes Messrs West & Muir continued success.

WHAT SAY THE PREACHERS?—At the recent meeting of the Medical Association, at Owen Sound, in the discussion following Dr. Cassidy's paper on "Physical Exercise," it was universally conceded that dancing is the best physical exercise known. This will be good news to the lovers of dancing, but what will the preachers say?

BAND CONCERT PROGRAM.—The following program will be rendered at the citizens band's open-air concert on Broadway to-morrow (Friday) evening:

|---|---|
| Big Hit (quickstep) | Feagean |
| Only a Year (waltzes) | Mackie |

| Little Fisherman (waltz) | |
| Star Knocker (gallop) | Feagean |

USE PRINTER'S INK.—No one who goes about with his eyes and ears open can doubt that the subject of advertising is of general interest. On the streets, in the cars and at public places every where one frequently hears people commenting upon the efforts of some brainy user of printers' ink. Let no advertiser imagine that the public does not appreciate merit or novelty when it takes the form of an advertisement.

CALLED HOME.—The many friends of the family will regret to hear of the death of Mary Jane Reid, wife of Mr. James Legatt, which occurred at her residence at Chesley, on Friday last. Mrs. Legatt was a daughter of Mr. John Reid, of Muskoka, formerly of Mono township. The deceased was a lady of many estimable qualities, and her death will be regretted very much by her friends in Chesley and this vicinity. Mrs. Legatt was 38 years of age.

REJECTED FOR IMPERTINENCE.—We regret to learn that one of our high school students was rejected at the recent primary examination for what the Department terms "impertinence." The nature of the impertinence is not stated but it must have been serious to cause such a result. It is a warning to all facetious and overly clever persons not to be too free with their wit for it some times proves a boomerang. It is also a subject for deep regret among all who value the reputation for sobriety that our students possess.—Mt. Forest Representative.

GRANDJURY LIST.—The following gentlemen will compose the grandjury for the Dufferin fall assizes: Matthew Lanktree, John Hall, John Johnston, Amaranth; Robt. Donaldson, John Essen, Robt. Brown, John Fearns, East Garafraxa; Hugh McGuire, Rich. Allen Samuel Crozier, John Barclay, Joseph Anderson, Mono; Wm. Wilson, Walter Crawley, Chas. Anderson, Mulmur; Samuel Legatt, Geo. Clayton, East Luther; Geo. Rutledge, Jas. Tait, Melmar; Geo. E. Irwin, Andrew Ford, Simon Jelly, Shelburne; W. Bryant, John Aikins, Orangeville.

THE DOG-POISONING FIEND.—The dog poisoning fiend (or fiends), who commenced business in Orangeville once a year has been on the warpath for the last couple of weeks. Already several valuable pets have met death at the miscreant's hands; but the climax was reached on Saturday morning when a valuable hound belonging to Pumpmaker Williamson was seized with cramps and stiffened out. Emetics were administered to the poor animal and in a couple of days the dog was all right. The gun club has taken the matter up and a reward of $25 is offered for the conviction of the dastards.

JOE IN THE TOILS.—Joe Agnew, formerly of Orangeville but at present rusticating in Mono, was in town on Saturday and got a pretty good jag on, so much so that the chief cop. escorted him up to get P. M. Pattullo's opinion on Joe's condition. When they arrived at the magistrate's office Joe still maintained that he wasn't full, and the P. M. agreed with him, remarking, however, that he had better go up to the "castle" and stay with Gov. Sutherland until Wednesday. Joe went, but he didn't remain the allotted time. Bill Nelson, of Mono, called around on Monday and secured Joe's release and took him out to the former's farm.

A BABY SCALDED.—On Tuesday of last week the eighteen-month-old son of Wm. Hicks, a man employed at R. Allen's blacksmith shop on Mill street, met with a mishap that almost ended fatally. The little fellow was standing on the floor previous to breakfast, and, reaching up, caught hold of the tea pot which was sitting on the corner of the table and which was filled with hot water. Before his parents could interfere the tea pot upset, spilling the contents over the child's face, shoulders and arms. The flesh peeled off in several places and left the little fellow in a terrible state. For several days his life was despaired of, but now he is rapidly recovering.

BAD CARBONS THE CAUSE.—Last week an editorial appeared in THE SUN censuring Chairman Ketchum of the Street Lighting committee for not seeing that the citizens of this town receive better light for the money paid. Bookkeeper Kelly of the Electric Light company explained to us why the light was not as steady and brilliant as of yore. He said the company purchased a number of Canadian carbons, and as the industry has just commenced in Canada the carbons were not up to the mark, and carbons bought in the United States were buried in the custom house at Windsor for over a week. "Consequently," said Mr. Kelly, "we had to use inferior carbons or shut off the light."

HORSE-THIEVES.—Late Friday night or early Saturday morning some thieves broke into Mr. John Harris' stable, Charleston, and stole his horse and a sett of single harness. All they wanted now to complete their turn-out was a buggy, and this the thieves found at Hotelkeeper Dodds' stable. They then hitched up and drove off. When Messrs. Harris and Dodds discovered their loss next morning they notified the police in the adjoining counties. On Sunday evening the owners of the stolen articles and Constable Tom Smith found the horse and rig tied in a bush near Harriston, but the thieves could not be found. Mr. Harris returned with the rig and Mr. Dodds proceeded in search of the thieves. At last reports the robbers were still at large.

FATAL ACCIDENT!

A Load of Wood Tumbles on James Delaney, of Caledon, and Ends His Earthly Career.

A very sad and fatal accident befell Mr. James Delaney, a well known and highly respected resident of the township of Caledon, on Friday afternoon last. Mr. Delaney lived about three miles from Orangeville on a farm on the Centre road. When the accident occurred Mr. Delaney was drawing a load of wood up to the house. He had only a short distance to go, but before he could get that distance throwing the unfortunate man to the ground. The horses took fright and ran away. Mr. Delaney laid on the ground unconscious until he was carried to the house. A medical examination revealed the fact that several of his ribs were broken and were pressing the lungs and one of his shoulders was also broken. He lingered in agony until one o'clock Sunday morning, when death put an end to his suffering. Deceased leaves a family of two grown up sons, who reside at Corbetton.

THE LOAD UPSET,

The remains were interred in the Charleston cemetery on Monday, the funeral being very largely attended.

The editor sat on his hard bottom chair trying to think of a thought and he plunged his fingers about through his hair, but not one topic then brought. He had written on temperance, temperance trade, and on the prospects of a bumper crop, and joked about ice-cream and weak lemonade, till his readers had told to stop. And weary of thinking, sleep came to his eyes, and he pillowed his head on the desk, when the thoughts which awake had refused to arise, came in troops that were strong and grotesque. And as the ideas airily float, he selects the bright one of the tribe; and this is the gem while dreaming he wrote:—"Now is the time to subscribe."

A 22-MINUTE SESSION.

The C. V. R. Special Committee's Report Laid over Until the Next Meeting—A Detailed R. & B. Statement Ordered to be Brought In.

There was very little stir when THE SUN's representative got around to the council chamber at 8 o'clock on Monday night. He found Mayor Walsh, Reeve Lindsay, Deputy-reeve Endacott, Ald. Youmans, Bailey, Green and Coleman present. Ald. Ketchum arrived a few minutes later. Besides the civic authorities, Chief Shields and two press representatives, there was not a living soul in the chamber.

The clerk was absent, so Mr. Bailey performed his duties. The acting clerk read the minutes of the last regular meeting, which were amended and adopted.

ACCOUNTS.

A. Turner, $1.40, referred to T. P. committee; John Joll, $4, referred to F. & W. committee; Jas. Graham, $21, ordered to be paid.

A COMMUNICATION

from Inspector of Weights & Measures Boulster, of Ottawa, saying that the town weigh scales would be fixed right in a short time.

Reeve Lindsay read the town treasurer's statement for August, which, as usual, showed an amount overdrawn at the bank.

A WHITE ELEPHANT.

The special committee appointed to try and arrange with the C. P. R. in the matter of the old C. V. R. grounds on east Broadway brought in a report in favor of leaving things as they stand. Some time ago the railway company offered to convey the land to the town if the corporation would release them from their bond of building a store house here. The council thought it would be a good idea to assume control of the old roadbed and convert it into a road. By doing this the people of Caledon would avoid several big bills between here and Melville. A committee was deputed to wait upon the council of Caledon and arrange matters of taking over the property. The Caledon Fathers, however, were not favorable to the project and the matter dropped. The town derives $50 a year in taxes from the property. The report was left over until the next meeting.

SQUIBS.

A by law providing for the collection of poll-taxes will be introduced at the next meeting.

The deputy reeve moved a motion instructing the Street Lighting committee to see that the electric lights on the streets are turned on earlier.

Reeve Lindsay thought the chairman of the R. & B. committee should have reported before this. Mr. Bailey explained why he didn't report. He said the largest part of the work would be finished before the next meeting and then he intended to bring in a detailed report.

The council then adjourned after a brief session of twenty two minutes.

SHELBURNE.

(From the Economist.)

Mr. John Blair has in his garden the tallest sun flowers we have ever seen. One measures over ten feet.

At a meeting of the Shelburne Public School Board held Tuesday evening last in the Council Chamber a resolution was passed having for its object the exclusion of all pupils from other sections now attending Shelburne School—that is, those who can be legally excluded. This course has been found necessary owing to local requirements.

Last Sunday at midnight, Wm. White, a C. P. R. brakesman, while setting a brake on a car at Shelburne station fell from the top of the car and struck the platform, breaking his thigh bone. Drs. Norton and Rooney adjusted the fracture, and the man was taken to the Toronto Hospital by the train upon which he was working.

The committee on special attractions have about completed arrangements for a first-class programme during the days of the Dufferin Central Fair, Thursday and Friday, Oct. 2nd and 3rd. Among other events on the first day there will be performances by a company of acrobats, and exhibition of club swinging, by Mr. W. H. Bennett, a football match, &c. In the evening there will be a grand illumination of the grounds and building by electric light. The second day will be full of interesting events, closing with a magnificent display of fireworks. Keep in view the great Dufferin Central Fair.

Mr. B. Clark informs us of a somewhat strange occurrence. A son of Mr. Clark had secured a rabbit and kept it in a pen made of a large box turned upside down. One day a dog came along and killed the rabbit, but the story is not ended. Fully one week afterwards Mr. Clark's son, and his cousin Rolstin Large, were playing about the yard when they noticed the dog pawing away at the ground where the rabbit pen had been, and it was not long before a little dead rabbit was dragged out by him at a spot where the earth seemed rather loose. Further effort on the dogs part was rewarded by finding a little live rabbit. Then the boys drove the dog off and commenced a search, resulting in bringing to light five little white rabbits. These were the progeny of the old one killed a week before and of whose existence nothing had previously been known. It seems it is the custom of the mother rabbit to make a burrow for her little ones, covering them up for safety, and only removing the earth at the proper time for feeding them. Mr. Clark administered cow's milk with a spoon and the little "bunnies" are doing well, notwithstanding the fact that they could not have been more than a week old when deprived of their mother, and that they had no nourishment for seven or eight days. How tenaciously human beings and animals will cling to life!

A Humble Story.

I HAVE used your Burdock Blood Bitters and Pills and find them everything to me. I had dyspepsia with bad breath and bad appetite, but after a few days use of B. B. B. I felt stronger, could eat a good meal and felt myself a different man.

On Tuesday forenoon an accident occurred in the engine room of Richardson's roller mills by which the engineer, Edward Boswell, narrowly escaped being killed. Mr. Boswell, while sitting on the engine, heard a rattle in the cylinder and hastily rose to shut it down, but just as he was passing the end of the cylinder was blown knocked out and landed against the wall, grazing the body of Mr. Boswell in passage, knocking him down and rendering him unconscious for a few minutes. Had the engineer been six inches further advanced at the time of the accident he would no doubt have been killed. The piston of the engine had become detached from its shaft by the bolt on the end of the rod giving way and coming off, and the rod, striking the piston in its stroke, broke one of the plates and sent the whole apparatus flying across the room. Every valve one that held the head of the cylinder in place was snapped off and the rest tore out the thread in the cast iron with it. The mill will be idle all next in consequence, as the broken parts are sent to Toronto for repairs.

The police were at once notified and the dead man was removed to the station house in the City Hall. Deceased is a man of medium height, rather slight and perhaps 40 or 45 years of age. He has a heavy head of black hair, mixed with grey, and a heavy black moustache and no beard. ## A WINDSOR SHOOTING AFFAIR.

WINDSOR, Sept. 2.—Last night a dance of colored people took place at Brighton Beach. Some of the participants engaged in a row, during which Joseph Reed, aged about nineteen, living at 186 Goyeau street, was shot through the left cheek by one Kemp. Reed with remarkable fortitude walked to his home, accompanied by a friend named Kelly. The wounded man fainted three times on the way from loss of blood. Dr. Reaume probed for the ball this morning, but was unable to find it. Reed is delirious and his condition is dangerous. Soon after the shooting Kemp met William Reed, a brother of the victim, and drew his revolver. William was too fast for Kemp, however, and knocked him down, taking the revolver away. As William knew nothing of Kemp's attack on his brother he permitted him to escape. The police are looking for Kemp.

CUPID'S HARNESS.

Most women naturally look forward to matrimony as their proper sphere in life, but they should constantly bear in mind that a fair, rosy face, bright eyes, and a healthy, well-developed form, are the best passports to a happy marriage. All those wasting disorders, weaknesses, and functional irregularities peculiar to their sex, destroy beauty and attractiveness and make life miserable. An unfailing specific for these maladies is to be found in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrappers, and faithfully carried out for many years. $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

Poetry.

IN THE HEART OF THE WOODS.

Such beautiful things in the heart of the woods!
Flowers and ferns, and the soft green moss,
Such love of the birds, in the solitudes,
Where the swift wings glance, and the tree-tops toss;
Spaces of silence, swept with song,
Which nobody hears but the God above;
Spaces where myriad creatures throng,
Sunning themselves in his guarding love.

Such safety and peace in the heart of the woods,
Far from the city's dust and din,
Where passion nor hate of man intrudes,
Nor fashion nor folly has entered in.
Deeper than hunter's trail hath gone,
Glimmers the tarn where the wild deer drink;
And fearless and free comes the gentle fawn,
To peep at herself o'er the grassy brink.

Such pledge in love in the heart of the woods.
For the Maker of all things keeps the least,
And over the tiny flowerets broods,
With care that for ages has never ceased.
If he care for this, will he not for thee—
Thee, whereveh thou art to-day?
Child of an infinite Father, see;
And safe in such gentlest keeping stay.

JINNY.

She had no paw nor maw
Nor any blood nor kin,
'N thet's thucome it happened
Thet we all took her in,
A poor, peaked little critter,
Red headed, pale, an' thin.

Six boys thar was 'o we uns,
An' pap he used to 'gree
Thet five of us was likely
As you would wish to see,
'An one of us was slowly,
'An thet thar one was me.

An' Jinny used to pleg me
For bein' big an lean,
All hands an' feet, an' freckles
The thickest ever seen,
She judged 'twas only sunburn
Kept me from lookin' green.

First off I didn't mind it,
Them funnin' ways of hern,
But when she took to growin'
Like a slim young forest fern,
An' did her hair up on top, why
Her jokes begin to burn.

I knowed I wasn't nothin'
Let off 'ginst John and Jim.
An' Bod—well, he was slightly,
An' Ted—I looked at him
An' scared his chance with Jinny,
Was big an' mine was slim.

So I 'lowed to never mention
How much I keered for her;
Cos I judge to pine in secret
It passes easier
Then to pine with folks a-knowin'
Jest what you're pinin' for.

I aped a friendly manner
An' talked with her right smart
About her beaux an reckoned
She hedn't any heart,
An' one day when I said so
Her eyes flew wide apart.

In a sudden, curious fashion,
An the blue looked wet an' she
Was pink as any rosebush,
An' I? well, when I see
Thet blush—well, the truth is,
She's goin' to marry me!

Unbearable Agony.

For three days I suffered severely from summer complaint, nothing gave me relief and I kept getting worse until the pain was almost unbearable, but after I had taken the first dose of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, I found great relief and it did not fail to cure me.

COZY CORNERS.

The very word cosy has an homey, thing attractive, even when applied only to a corner. When applied to a parlor, it suggests comfort and a homelike feeling.

Our corners are generally the most unattractive and neglected parts of our rooms. We rather leave them bare, for we put the most insignificant table we have in the corner, or throw in some tall, ugly vase. Impressed with the unattractiveness of our corners, it is said that an English lady invented the cosy corner, now so popular with many persons.

The corner should have a low, broad seat all around it, which will fill the angle. A carpenter can do this; then the cushions should be made to fit, which can be covered with some pretty inexpensive material, with a deep flounce at the edge to reach the floor. Similar cushions, without the flounce, are placed at the back, and edged with narrow fringe. Sateen covered cushions can be purchased at a reasonable price, and it is well to buy these and cover them with the material desired. Over the middle cushion put a bracket on the wall, on which place a vase filled with grasses, palm leaves, and here and there feathery pampas. At one end of the seat put a small pretty table, on which place a small palm, and at the other end a table (one of the artistic tables now seen), on which put photographs of foreign views or celebrated people.

Cosy corners are sometimes adjusted in such a way as to proclaim the peculiar occupation of the lady of the house. One is arranged as an artist's corner. The shelves run around the top of the seat, and on them are displayed pictures, while at the end of the seat is a draped easel, on which is an oil painting, and at the other end is a "bentwood" table, on which is a handsome painted vase containing a Markart bouquet.

Japanese corners are very pretty. There is nothing richer or more ornamental than the beautiful Japanese lacquer work, which comes in a variety of articles. A Japanese corner has, over the middle cushion, a large bracket of Japanese manufacture, on which is a Japanese tea-set, while on another there are Japanese curiosities. A lady of taste and ingenuity can devise a cosy corner herself.

A BENEFICENT DISCOVERY.

The Noblest Achievement of Science.

The iron horse, with its tireless strength, its pulses of vapour and its heart of flame, is a glorious exponent of the creative capacity of the human mind; and the metallic nerves through which intelligence courses over a continent prove by every flash of thought which traverses them that man possesses one attribute essentially grand, the power to annihilate space and time. But vast and important as have been the results of making steam and lightning the common carrier and messenger of the world, the discovery by which weak or impure blood can be vitalized or restored to new vigor and purity by means of internal and external remedies is of infinite value. The resources of vegetable chemistry as developed and applied by Thomas Holloway have proved equal to this mighty task. His famous remedies impart to the stream of life a disinfecting principle which frees the system from all impure and poisonous elements. The powers of chemistry are almost beyond calculation, and as he has brought them to bear upon all the varieties of disease in those invaluable vegetable compounds known as HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT, they have compassed their highest and holiest object.

Steam, as the great motor, is a subsidiary agent. Its usefulness consists, namely, in conveying substantial benefits, with speed and certainty, to the fields in which they are to operate. It is simply the bearer of blessings, not their originator. Of all the freight which it carries over land and sea, there is perhaps none so precious as Holloway's remedies. It is scarcely a figure of speech to say that whithersoever it conveys them it flies "with healing on its wings."

Under the influence of the Ointment, the skin however disfigured by eruptions or excrescences, becomes a tabula rasa, pure, spotless, and transparent; and this erasure of blemishes is not accomplished by driving back disease into the vital recesses of the system but by neutralizing the morbid material which feeds it.

The Pills act upon the internal fluids and the organs which secrete them upon the sanitary principle. They destroy the acrid particles subjected to their chemical action, as infallibly as an alkali neutralizes an acid, and at the same time impart a mild and constant electric action to the secretive and excretive machinery.

The sanction of governments, the patronage of princes, the approval of all Christian nations, the gratitude of pagan millions attest the worth of these twin curatives. In fact there is no region with which England or any country has any commercial intercourse where Holloway would not find himself at home. Some estimate may be formed of the extent and variety of his foreign correspondence, from the fact that sixty corresponding clerks, of which number sixteen are accomplished linguists, are employed in conducting it. He is the centre of a sanitary circle that belts the world.—Daily Republic.

Read this extract from the scientific papers of Great Britain and Europe:

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it proved cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their proved specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure many ill from a single bottle.

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that Catarrh, that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh; with all the disagreeable and annoying effects. It is at this season of the year that we should be on our guard against the insidious encroachments of this loathsome disease. Neglect an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Dorne, Sudbury, Ont., says—I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symtoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm; Sweet breath, stoppage of the dropping into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

T. D. D. Loyd, 6 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the wonderful healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have procured myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shal not fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM

INSTANTLY RELIEVES

Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallery, Mallorytown, Ont., says—My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cent for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

FULFORD & Co. Brockville, Ont.

NASAL BALM

POSITIVELY CURES

CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect satisfaction of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of days.

IT SHINES FOR ALL.

ORANGEVILLE, SEPT. 11, 1890.

A HALF-SHEET.

Owing to the excessive rush of work that is being done at this office this week THE SUN appears in half its regular size. Our subscribers, therefore, will please be kind enough to overlook the impossibility of our getting out a whole sheet.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Mr Adam Brown M. P., Canada's Honorary Commissioner to the Burmuda Exhibition, has returned from the Maritime Provinces, where he was successful in arousing the merchants and manufacturers to renewed interest in the project.

The farmers' alliance in Nebraska has threatened to boycott the newspapers which oppose their platform. Those who predict a short life for the movement will have their faith strengthened by such a course. A movement founded on a public need can be strengthened by criticism.

Mr R. A Lyon, ex M P. P., for East Algoma, has been appointed Registrar of East Algoma. Mr. Lyon represented the constituency named from 1888 until 1890, with an intermission from 1883 to 1885. He has been for many years engaged as a lumberman and merchant among his late constituents.

The Federation of Labor of Baltimore being asked for aid for the New York Central strikers' unceremoniously tabled the request, and in the course of the discussion Mr. Powderly was denounced as the Jonah of the K. of L. movement. A little while ago the Master Workmen could appreciate that nothing succeeds like success, now he is learning that nothing fails like failure.

The Brantford Millers Association has collapsed. The reason of this is supposed to be on account of wheat being heavier this year than for several seasons past, the buyers evidently thought it would be more profitable to them to abandon the tester. Where averages from 64 to 65 lbs. to the bushel this year and last year it was only from 56 to 57 lbs. to the bushel.

Another secret is lost to the world by the death of the only man who knew it. This is the Sterling Dying company's process of dyeing a perfect fast black James Pike, who knew the process, had for years been manager of the company, where he had made a fortune A few days ago he dropped dead of apoplexy, and the Sterling company is grieving over the loss of the secret.

The potato blight has also appeared in Scotland within the past week. Already it has so infested the Lothian districts that Scotch potatoes have been refused admission at Newcastle, which was heretofore the chief market. Both this and the continued bad luck of the grain harvest in England will have a direct bearing upon the Irish situation as assuredly diminishing the food supply of the islands.

The cash value of this year's crop in Ontario is placed at nearly one hundred and twelve million dollars, as compared with one hundred and two million in 1889. This is an increase of nearly ten million dollars, or twenty five dollars for each farmer in the province. With a abundance in Ontario and Manitoba there should be a big boom in business during the coming fall and winter.—Toronto Telegram. Hooray for the N P.!

The harvest moon is the full moon occurring nearest the autumnal equinox, and is regarded as particularly favorable to agriculturists, because after it fills it rises from night to night more early after sunset than any other full moon of the year, thus prolonging the light needed for securing crops. As the harvest moon does not arrive until September 26th our satellite will this year lend her aid to farmers almost to the utmost of her ability.

C C Tennant, the brother-in-law of Stanley, was asked at Newport if there was any truth in his reported engagement to Miss Furniss, of Lenox, and declared there was none. "While I know Miss Furniss and esteem her as a high minded and Christian lady and a philanthropist," said Mr. Tennant, "there is no truth in the report of my engagement." Tennant also says that he is not to manage Stanley here and is not engaged to the daughter of Senator Hiscock. Mr. Tennant complains that there is a demand in America for sensational gossip.

On Friday night last while a party of six ladies and gentlemen were enjoying a sail on Smith's pond their craft sprung a leak and before the pumps could be manned sank to the bottom. Fortunately the water was not deep and the occupants were able to wade out. It is a significant fact that the party were all Baptists.—Ingersoll Chronicle.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE RAVOR.

(Concluded from last week.)

Christian Science, we know various names, has its hundreds of victims Years ago a popular craze for the laying faire system broke out in England, and fanatical parents were frequently brought before the courts for the death of their neglected children. Christian science is only the latest phase of this folly. It seems to be associated with the non-resistance Christianity of Tolstoi, who in one of his books laments the time when women were glad to say 'The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away," instead of bewailing their loss. Indeed, the fatalism—for that is what this refusal to use means of cure really is—which leaves little one to perish is more widespread than many imagine. Where it is adults whose health or life is at stake, there is an element of hopefulness and which, if accompanied by certain changes in diet and habits, may really produce some good effect. But deep seated prejudice [illegible] of the Christian Science Vision, in not unknown of cure by such simple conditions. And there is, of course, doubly true where the advice of the empirical enthusiast comprises the defiance of known sanitary and medical precepts. Persons suffering from disease sometimes become weak-minded and credulous and pretendings who avail themselves of such a condition of mind to the hurt of the poor patients are deserving of punishment.

SHELBURNE.

R. Falconer exhibited their dogs at the Darrow dog show last week.

The Dufferin Central Exhibition will be held here on Oct. 2nd and 3rd.

P. S. Inspector Gordon, of Orangeville, visited the Shelburne school last week.

Butcher Marlatt accidently cut his wife's other day while "dressing" a beast. He is all right once more.

The dog tag (less) by law is not giving the best of satisfaction. About four dogs out of every ten are without tags.

GRAND VALLEY.

Court was held here last Thursday.

The Dillon block is receiving a coat of paint.

Another storey is being built to the Commercial hotel.

Some of the neighboring farmers have sown their fall wheat.

Out of four acres Mr T Sime threshed 140 bushels of fall wheat.

Dr. May, inspector of Mechanics Institutes, Toronto, was in the village last week.

Mr. R. E. Hamilton, clerk of East Luther is away on a trip up to Sault Ste. Marie.

A good number of fat cattle and sheep have been bought by drovers in this locality lately.

Miller Hilborn met with a serious accident at the flour mill on Monday of last week He jumped from the top of the rolls to the floor, causing a blood vessel to burst. He will soon be around again.

The Woman's Foreign Mission Society of the Presbytery of Orangeville will hold their semi annual meeting in the Presbyterian church, Grand Valley, on Wednesday, Sept 10th, at 2 p m Mrs. (Professor) McLaren, of Knox College, Toronto, will address the meeting Interesting papers will be read by several ladies of the society.

Rev. W. A Hunter, of Erskine church, Toronto, who has been renewing old acquaintances in Orangeville and vicinity for the past few days, returned to the city on Tuesday evening.

Col. Benwell, father of F. C. Benwell, was to have sailed on Thursday last from England to give evidence at the trial of Burchell, but a cablegram announces the fact that the old gentleman is dying, and, of course, will not be a witness at the trial. Col. Benwell's cousin may come to Canada, but this is not certain. From latest reports it is hardly likely Col. Benwell will survive to hear the verdict. A local paper gives currency to a rumor that Miss Alice Smith, of Eastwood, can impeach a witness in the case, but does not.

Local Intelligence.

Council on Monday evening.

The Toronto exhibition opened on Monday.

The erection of the new foundry buildings has commenced.

Now cases of typhoid fever are turning up in town every day.

Mr. Robt. Crieg, from Lakefield, reports business brisk in his line.

Hughes Bros. are turning out several fine wedding orders this week.

Orangeville exhibition on Thursday and Friday, Oct. 9th and 10th.

The employes of Hughes Bros., merchant tailors, held a ball on Monday evening.

The exhibition grounds and buildings will be illuminated by electricity on the evening of the 9th.

Undertaker King has greatly improved his establishment on West Broadway by putting in plate glass windows.

Miss McKewan, dress and mantle maker, has received the latest fall fashions. Shop over Stewart Hewat's Co's., store.

Mr. John Kearns, ex-deputy reeve of Orangeville, attended the funeral of his sister-in-law, Mrs. Wm. Kearns, at Benton last week.

The effects of John Backus, an insolvent quarry owner at Credit Forks, will be sold by public auction at that place next Thursday.

On Friday morning last a dog belonging to Mr. C. W. Sydie fell a victim to the dog poisoner's wrath. Mr. S. suspects that a certain person residing on Broadway did the deed.

The Tobermory Liberal enters upon its fourteenth year to day. The Liberal is a first class paper and is well patronized. It is a newsy sheet and is to pass many more milestones.

Last week the Dundalk Herald was ten years old. Under the management of Mr. Hall then "kid" has prospered wonderfully. Continued success to Hall, is THE SUN'S worst wish.

The Mt. Forest lacrosse boys arrived in town on Monday and remained over night. They left on Tuesday morning for Toronto, where they will compete for the intermediate lacrosse championship of the C. L. A.

One day last week Dime Sewards well known trotting mare injured herself so badly that, in all probability, she will be unfit for further use. Quite naturally Dime feels pretty bad as he intended to take in the fall shows.

Joined in Holy Wedlock.—Mr. P. J. Beech, cooper for the firm of Endicott Bros., was married at St. Gregory's church Oshawa, on Thursday last, to Miss Elizabeth Smith, of Oshawa, late milliner with Green Bowels & Co., here. The Rev. Father Hand performed the ceremony. The newly wedded couple have taken up their residence on 2nd avenue.

The Sick.—Mr. Wm. Hall, of west Broadway, has been confined to his room for the last two weeks with a severe attack of sciatic. Mrs. Wm. Marshall, who was very low with typhoid fever last week is now on the road to recovery. Mr. P. McCabe will be around again in a few days. Mr. Geo. Siggins is still improving and will be out shortly. Mr. Geo. Robinson has not gained any in strength during the past week.

Death of Mr John Skelton.—Many friends in this town will regret to learn of the death of Mr. John Skelton, son of Mr. Alex. Skelton, which occurred at Battleford, N. W. T., on Monday. Deceased was born in Caledon township where he resided as a boy and young man and was very popular. He went to the Northwest about six years ago where he engaged in farming at which he was very successful. Deceased leaves a wife and family.

In Error.—One of our uptown contemporaries committed a grave error last week when it lauded the artistic work done at the Bank of Hamilton building by giving Messrs. Fuller & Allen credit for performing the work. The painting, which is very artistically executed, was done by Mr Robt. Irvine, that well known painter of this town. Mr. Irvine gets well-meritted credit for the high class of work which he does, and this particular job is no exception.

That's Correct.—There is no safeguard like a local newspaper. Nothing can do more to help to keep up a town and help business; and merchants, above all, should give them the preference. Yet frequently the only return the paper gets for their enterprise is depreciation from those whom they have benefitted both directly and indirectly. As long as this is the case newspapers will be prone to welcome new comers in the field, even if their visits are brief.—Printer's Ink.

The Organ Recital.—The seating capacity in the Methodist church was taxed to its utmost capacity last Thursday evening during the organ recital. Our readers are aware the congregation of the church has recently put in a beautiful pipe organ, the cost of which, was nearly $1,300, and this was the occasion of the recital yesterday. The performers, who came from Toronto, acquitted themselves very creditably, and the vast audience enjoyed the entertainment immensely. The affair netted quite a sum.

Harvest Home.—A Harvest Home in connection with the Church Angel church, Mono, will be held at the commodious residence of Mr. Jos. Leighton, on Monday, September 15th. Every arrangement has been made for having a most enjoyable afternoon and evening. The Citizens' band will furnish music and speakers will be delivered by Revs. Henderson, West, Pearson, Gilmour and Ballantine. A football match between the Rangers of Cardwell and a neighboring team will be one of the features of the afternoon. Tea will be served at 5.30, and a choice programme will be rendered in the evening. Should the day prove fine the Harvest Home will be sure to prove a great success.

Gunner Hunter—Rev. Father Cherrier and T. J. Gunner, of Regina, brother of Dollar Sutherland of the same place, some time ago, the Best and fastest trotters in America. On looking over the Regina Leader, form of a recent date we found that Mr. Sutherland's stock surprised the natives at a race meeting held there a short time ago. In the five year old class, Gift O'Moore, by Sphinx, driven by Mr. S., won the mile race in the remarkably fast time of 2.34½, and in the two year old class, Surplus, also by Sphinx, took second place in the two mile race, although he made better time than his three worthy competitors, making the distance in 3.49½. We should have mentioned that Gift O'Moore easily defeated four other first class trotters. "Doc" Sutherland is proud of his stock and well he might be by owning such young and likely flyers.

Death of an Old Settler.—On Thursday, the 4th instant, another old resident of Amaranth township passed away to her long home. Esther Irwin, relict of the late John Braiden, was in her 74th year, and was born in the county Tyrone, Ireland, in 1815. In 1828 she came to America, staying for short periods in Philadelphia and Brockport. Mrs. Braiden settled in Amaranth township forty seven years ago and has resided there ever since. The deceased lady has for the past ten years resided with her son, Mr. C. Braiden, ex reeve of Amaranth. Deceased was one of the oldest residents of the township and was well known and highly esteemed by all. A family of seven sons survive her. The sons are:—Thos. Braiden, Toronto; John Braiden, Montana; Christopher, Andrew, James and William who reside in Amaranth and Samuel Braiden who lives in the Western States. The funeral took place on Saturday afternoon to the Town cemetery and was very largely attended.

Two Smash-ups.—Friday is looked upon by the more or less superstitious people as an unlucky day; and last Friday certainly was for the C. P. R. A freight with two engines left the Owen Sound yard at 3.30 in the afternoon and was followed at 3.55 by an express When about three miles from Owen Sound several freight cars broke loose and ran back at a terrific rate of speed and dashed into the passenger, smashing five cars. The wreck caught fire, but was subsequently extinguished by the Owen Sound fire company. Nobody was seriously hurt, but several passengers, the baggageman and Engineer O'Connor received some painful bruises. Another accident occurred the same evening at Springfield, C. V. division An axle on one of the twelve Hamilton refrigerator cars, all laden with fresh meat from Chicago, broke and the whole train left the track. The cars were smashed to atoms, and traffic was delayed in consequence. Both trains arrived in Orangeville several hours behind time.

FLOGGING A PRISONER.

William J. McLeod Receives Part of His Punishment.

The first instalment of his flogging was meted out Saturday morning at the Central prison to Wm. John McLeod, who was convicted on August 6th last of criminal assault on a little girl at the Island. The prisoner, it will be remembered, was sentenced to 22 months' imprisonment and 40 lashes, 20 one month after entry, and the remainder in three months. When McLeod was brought to the Central he was recognized by the guards as an ex-prisoner, only released a short time before from a six month's sentence for participation in the Bolte outrages on the Street cars, at which time and as illustrated that he jumped overboard and was drowned.

Dr. W. T. Atkins arrived promptly at 9 o'clock to see that the prisoner was in fit condition to receive his punishment. By mistake another prisoner named Wilson, who closely resembled McLeod, was brought to the doctor. He grew very pale and horrors at the thought of suffering vicariously, and at length so far transgressed the rules as to explain that he was the wrong man. "What," said the doctor, "are you not McLeod?" "No," he exclaimed, very readily, "my name's Wilson." He was sent back to his cell and the right man produced.

The flogging process was carried out as in previous cases. The prisoner was escorted by a guard to the triangle at the end of the north corridor. Here he was instructed to take off his guernsey, and in a few moments he was securely strapped to the whipping post. McLeod is a man of about 32 years, of good height and muscular frame. There were no very marked indications of nervousness as he walked up to undergo the ordeal, but when the guard was ready for the signal the prisoner seemed to shrink as though he would gladly crawl through some kind of a crevice in the wall. The only spectators present were Deputy Warden Logan, Dr Aikins, two reporters and two guards When the deputy called "one," and the lash fell just below the right shoulder blade, leaving a vivid streak, the prisoner took a long inspiration that ended in a half-suppressed moan. At the second blow he yelled "Oh," at the third "Oh, mercy" and from that on each stroke called forth a piteous wail for mercy. At the conclusion, the prisoner's back was a dark purple color from shoulder to shoulder, but the skin remained unbroken. It will be a painful reminder of his brutal crime for some weeks. McLeod became perfectly quiet on his release and passed to his cell without a word. He will not be asked to work for some days, but most prisoners prefer occupation to the monotony of solitary confinement, even though every movement of the shoulders causes the pain to start afresh.

A SURPRISE FOR SOCIETY.

BALTIMORE, Sept. 7.—William O'Sullivan Dempsey, the former husband of Minnie Mills, the society actress, has married Mrs. Marie P. Hollyday, a dashing widow of Hartford county. Mr. and Mrs. Dempsey had been separated for some time, but until the publication of the marriage notice this morning the divorce had been a secret.

Mrs. Hollyday is the daughter of William P. Trimble who belongs to one of the oldest and most aristocratic families in the State. Since the death of her husband about two years ago Mrs. Hollyday has been living at the parental homestead at Edgewood, about twenty miles from the city on the Philadelphia, Wilmington, and Baltimore Railroad. Her husband disappeared suddenly, and a few days afterward his body was washed ashore in the harbor. It was never found but whether it was an accidental death or a suicide.

Cardinal Newman was one of the many eminent men who have used abstracts as an aid to study. He drew up a summary of every book he read, together—in many cases—with a statement of his own views upon it. Mr. Gladstone, it may be added, does something of the same kind. He reads a book, pencil in hand, marking off on the margin those passages which he wishes to remember; querying those about which he is in doubt, and putting a cross opposite those which he disputes. At the end of the volume he constructs a kind of index of his own, which enables him to refer to what he wishes to remember in the book. Mr. Gladstone is thus an advocate of marginal marking. The great Sir William Hamilton was in favor of underscoring. "Intelligent underlining," he said, "gave a kind of abstract of an important work, and by the use of different colored inks to mark a difference of contents and discriminate the doctrinal from the historical or illustrative elements of an argument or exposition the abstract becomes an analysis very serviceable for ready reference."

Unbearable Agony.

For three days I suffered severely from summer complaint, nothing gave me relief and I kept getting worse until the pain was almost unbearable, but after I had taken the first dose of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, I found great relief and it did not fail to cure me.

WM. T. GLYDE, Wilfrid, Ont.

The overseer of the Sudbury nickle and copper mines informed the editor of the Flesherton Advance of a visit paid to the mines by Herr Krupp, a son of the veteran ordance manufacturer of Essen, Germany; a German Baron capitalist, a New York capitalist and a German metallurgist, with a view to testing the quality and quantity of ore produced and its adaptability to the manufacture of a new gun metal which it is claimed, will as far surpass for strength and durability the metal now in use as steel surpasses pig iron. Nickel is employed very largely in the manufacture of this new metal, and the mines at Sudbury produce an almost inexhaustible supply. If, as is expected, their report will be favorable, it will have an important effect upon this branch of the mining industries of Ontario.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—With changing temperature the digestion becomes impaired, liver disordered, and mind despondent. The cause of these irregularities is easily removed by the use of Holloway's Ointment and Pills. They directly attack the source of the evil, remove all impurities from the circulation, restore the affected organs to their natural state, and correct all defective secretions. An easy means of restoring health and strength is supplied by Holloway's Pills and Ointment. These famous medicines are blood renovating remedies, whose influence reaches the great centres of the nervous system, purifies the circulation, induces a healthy state of the bodily powers, gives tone to the stomach and brain, producing a desire for food, and all the proper requirements for health and vigour.

The London and Kingston Fall Assizes opened on Monday.

A Letter From Emerson.

The annual volume of canal statistics issued shows that the greater proportion of the traffic that passed through the Welland canal last year was bound from one United States port to another.

Lieut.-Col. Houghton, Deputy Adjutant-General for the Fifth Military District, has addressed an open letter to Gen. Middleton in which he more than insinuates that he was not recommended for a C. M. G. owing to the General's professional jealousy.

A grave and curious accident occured at Sorel, Que., being the spontaneous explosion of a cask that had contained methylated spirits. A boy named Page was struck by the flying staves, and, it is affirmed, fatally injured.

Mr. W. H. Paterson, an employee of Bertram Bros., Harrowsmith, fell out of the second story window in the Queen's Hotel, Kingston, and broke three ribs and an arm. He was closing the window when the accident occurred.

Rev. Father Strubbe, of the Redemptorist Order, who recently conducted a pilgrimage to the shrine of St. Anne de Beaupre, relates some wonderful cures, notably that of a girl of 12 who has been lame for years with hip disease and can now walk without crutches.

A stabbing affray took place in an eating-house on Adelaide street, Toronto. Robert Porter, a newsboy about 15 years of age, assaulted Samuel Ruppert and stabbed him in the face with a knife. Porter was promptly arrested on the charge of felonious wounding.

The body of Mr. E. A. Broadbent, Utica N.Y., who was drowned last Thursday, has been found at Kingston. The remains of Mr. W. F. Jaffa were also found later, in the bay near Frasview. Jaffa's remains were forwarded to Trenton, Ont.

The body of Capt. Jos. Green, of the ill-fated schooner Richard Thompson, was found near Black Point, P. E. I. Papers on his person led to his identification. A roll of money was found on him.

Mr. Dewar, of the 13th concession of Yarmouth, went to hitch his horses to the plough when one of them kicked him in the face, tearing the skin off and cutting a small piece of flesh. He drove to St. Thomas and had the wound dressed by a surgeon.

The afternoon express from the West at Perth struck a waggon belonging to Alex. Mc Innes, of Lanark township. The horses were frightened, became unmanageable, and while crossing the track one of the wheels came off the waggon. The men escaped unhurt. One of the horses had its leg broken and had to be shot.

George Moody, G. T. R. brakesman, at St. Thomas, was struck on the face with a brick thrown through the window of the Elgin Street Rink while the G. T. R. employees' dance was going on. He was knocked insensible, but recovered shortly after. Some boys who were put out are thought to be the guilty parties.

Gen. Sir John Ross gave a grand ball at Bellevue House, Halifax, in honor of Prince George. 600 guests were present. The historical old house and grounds were gorgeously decorated and dazzlingly illuminated with electricity and colored lanterns. The ball was one of the most brilliant ever given in that festive city.

A sad accident happened at St. Victor de Tring, Que., Mr. C. Coulombe, a farmer, accidentally shot his nephew, a youth aged 15 years, named Fortin. They were leaving the home together when a loaded rifle, which Coulombe carried, accidentally went off, the ball entering young Fortin's body. He fell into his father's arms, and died in about twenty minutes.

The deadly switch claimed another victim yesterday. Alfred Beck, employed as a switchman by the Grand Trunk Railway at Montreal, was engaged in the discharge of his duty yesterday morning, when he fell across the track with extended arms. A freight train passed over his arms and made him a cripple for the rest of his life.

James Chesney, the 8-year-old son of Mrs. George Reid, of Point Edward, was seen playing at 6 o'clock the other evening on the dock about the station. Not long after his body was found floating down the river past the elevator and was fished out by the crew of the car ferry Huron. Coroner Fraser was notified, but did not deem it necessary to hold an inquest. The cause of the accident remains a mystery.

The Simpson Island copper mine, situated at Passamaquody Bay, near Eastport, Me., and owned by T. K. Jinkens and John F. Crowe, Halifax, has been sold to an American company for $225,000 in stock. A company has been formed and incorporated in Boston with a capital of $1,000,000 in 10,000 shares of $100. Work is being vigorously prosecuted, and it is expected to be a bonanza to the American stockholders. It is said Messrs Jenkins and Crowe paid $2,000 for the mine.

There is a story afloat in Boston to the effect that the Chinese colony is soon to be enlivened by the presence of about sixty young women, imported direct from the Kingdom of Flowers. The fair ones, it is said, will land in San Francisco in a few days. Celestial's desiring wives have been warned to forward their names, backed by $50, to the grand mogul of the Seven Nations at San Francisco. "First come, first served," reads the Mongolian circular announcing chances for speedy marriage.

The Buffalo police commissioners are holding a public investigation of the circumstances attending the unwarranted arrest of Edith Sessions Tupper, which was brought about in Toronto by a telegram from Superintendent Morin, of Buffalo. Mrs. Tupper was mistaken for a servant girl thief named Mary Wilson. Superintendent Morin paid the bills on Detective Mack. The matter is exciting considerable interest, owing to the excellent social and business connections of Mr. and Mrs. Tupper.

A Rank Knight.

Mr. Reuben Knight, of Morris, Man., states that he was troubled with a rash all over his body which was cured with less than one bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters. He highly recommends it as a blood purifier of the greatest efficacy.

LOST BOTH HIS LEGS.

Terrible Accident to an Express Messenger at Oil City, Ont.

PETROLIA, Ont., Sept. 3.—A fearful accident occurred at Oil City this evening to Mr. William Dyer, express messenger, running between here and Oil City. It appears that the train, after coming to the station, backed up to take water, and when requesting the station Dyer attempted to get on. He missed his hold, and his legs got under the wheels of the baggage car, crushing them to a jelly. Dyer was noticed on the platform at Oil City station by the brakeman of Conductor Hodge's train, and told to get aboard, as the train would not stop when requesting, but he remarked that he could get on all right. Dyer was brought here, and both of his legs were amputated below the knees. It is thought he cannot possibly survive the shock.

No less than seventy-seven cases of typhoid fever were reported to the medical health officer in Toronto last week.

A Hostile Story.

I HAVE used your Burdock Blood Bitters and Pills and find them everything for me. I had dyspepsia with bad breath and bad appetite, but after a few days use of B. B. B. I felt stronger, could eat a good meal and felt myself a different man.

W. H. SYNES, Mosside, Ont.

It is not generally known that a single mouse turned loose in a grocery window will catch more flies in a single evening than fly paper catches all day. And, besides, he eats them and don't leave them lying around loose. Don't grudge the mouse his little mischief; he is a good fly and roach exterminator.

The Sambro Lighthouse

Is at Sambro, N. S., whence Mr. R. E. Hartt, writes as follows:—Without a doubt Burdock Blood Bitters has done me a lot of good. I was sick and weak and had no appetite, but B. B. B. made me feel smart and strong. Were its virtues more widely known, many lives would be saved.

HEALTHFUL EXERCISE.

Only a few months ago these romping, rosy-cheeked names were puny, delicate, pale, sickly girls. By the aid of Dr. Pierce's world-famed Favorite Prescription, they have blossomed out into beautiful, plump, hale, hearty, strong young women.

"Favorite Prescription" is an invigorating, restorative tonic and as a regulator and promoter of functional action at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, it is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is carefully compounded, by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to women's delicate organizations. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. It imparts strength to the whole system. For "run-down," worried, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an invigorating cordial and restorative tonic. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been faithfully carried out for many years.

Poetry.

"EARTH TO EARTH AND DUST TO DUST."

"Earth to earth and dust to dust,"
Here the evil and the just,
Here the youthful and the old,
Here the fearful and the bold,
Here the mother and the maid
In one silent bed we lay;
Here the vassal and the king
Side by side, lie withering;
"Earth to earth and dust to dust."

Age on age shall roll along
O'er this pale and mighty throng;
Those that wept them, those that weep,
All shall with those sleepers sleep,
Brothers and sisters of the morn,
Summer's sun and winter's storm,
Song of peace or battle roar,
Never shall break their slumber more;
Death shall keep his silent trust—
"Earth to earth and dust to dust."

But a day is coming fast;
Earth, thy slightest and thy last;
It shall come in fear and wonder,
Heralded by trump and thunder;
It shall come in strife and toil,
It shall come in blood and spoil,
It shall come in empires' groans,
Burning temples, trampled thrones;
Then, ambition, rue thy lust!
"Earth to earth, and dust to dust."

Then shall come the judgment sign,
In the East the King shall shine,
Flashing from Heaven's golden gate,
Thousands, thousands, round His state,
Spirits with the crown and plume;
Tremble, then, thou sullen tomb;
Heaven shall open to our sight,
In a blaze of glorious light,
Kingdoms of the ransomed dust—
"Earth to earth, and dust to dust."

Then shall, gorgeous as a gem,
Shine thy mount, Jerusalem;
Then shall in the desert rise,
Fruits of more than paradise;
Earth by angel feet be trod,
One great garden of her God;
Till are dried the martyr's tears
Through a glorious thousand years,
Now in hope of Him we trust—
"Earth to earth, and dust to dust."

CHAPTER XLVIII.

A WARM WELCOME.

A COMELY, pleasant-looking maid came to greet Silvia.

"Mrs. Rymer," she said, "my lady thought you would reach here about this time. Would you like to go to your rooms? They are ready for you."

Silvia followed her guide up the magnificent staircase, with its marble steps and rich crimson carpeting. Such gems of art as were strewn in that one short journey! such statues! Venus the beautiful, Hercules the strong, Apollo the godlike, intermixed with stands of rarest flowers, and pictures of priceless value. She was by this time quite accustomed to the luxury of great houses; but she had never seen anything like such wealth—such a display of magnificence as this, in her life.

In the second corridor they came to a door which opened into a small passage, disclosing the doors of two other apartments.

"My lady thought you would like both your rooms together, and not very far from hers," said the smiling maid.

Then she threw open the door of a pretty little sitting-room, furnished with great taste and elegance. A bright fire was burning, a lamp stood ready lighted on the table, the odor of flowers greeted her like a pleasant message; on the table stood a pretty tea service, all ready for use. There was such a look of home and comfort that Silvia's heart grew lighter. Some one who understood comfort had evidently been in the room to see that all was right for her, for on the table lay books, magazines, and periodicals.

Then the maid opened the next door, and Silvia saw a beautiful little chamber white, fresh, fragrant.

"I will unpack your boxes," said the girl, "while you take some tea, Mrs. Rymer."

"Shall I see Mrs. Greville this evening?" asked Silvia.

"I think so. Some visitors came quite unexpectedly to dinner, or my lady would have been here to welcome you herself. She wished me to say so."

"She is very kind!" said Silvia, gratefully, and the girl's face flushed warmly.

"Kind!" repeated the girl—"my mistress is an angel!" and Silvia liked her none the less for the warmth of the expression.

Then came a rest after the toil of the journey. It seemed to Silvia that she was in Fairyland. All the gloom that had made Lonsdale Park so melancholy, had disappeared. Here were the bright light, the warmth, the fragrance, the elegantly appointed table, the amusing books.

"My lines have fallen in pleasant places," thought the young girl; and then she began to wonder what would happen in this place—whether tragedy or farce, whether sorrow or joy, happiness or misery. She was thinking so deeply as to be hardly conscious, when a rap at the door aroused her.

"May I come in?" asked a voice, clear and sweet as the chime of a silver bell, and the next moment Silvia was looking to herself that in all her life she had seen nothing so sparkling, so bright, so exquisite as Mrs. Greville.

A sudden, sweet, subtle perfume filled the room; it was followed by the sound of rustling silk. Looking up hastily, Silvia saw a lady rather under than over the medium size, the loveliest, most graceful figure—petite, sparkling, radiant. Rich robes of black and white silk, trimmed with silver flowers and leaves, fell around her in graceful folds. The face was dark and bright, with some thing half foreign in its flashing, brilliant beauty; the eyes large, liquid, bright, and black as night; the eyebrows slightly arched; the lips ripe, red, and beautiful.

At first sight Silvia could not read the expression of that face. Was it mirthful, mischievous, scornful, or what? She could not at first determine. But the smile was very sweet and winning, the voice most marvelously musical and clear.

"I have hurried from my visitors," said Mrs. Greville, with a smile, "to bid you welcome to Lingholme."

"You are very kind," said Silvia. Then she grew somewhat confused at finding those dark eyes, full of half-mirthful humor, fixed upon her.

"You are very young, Mrs. Rymer, to be my chaperon. I should fancy that I have the advantage in years."

"Life does not seem to me to be altogether measured by time," replied Silvia. "I have seen people old at twenty, young at forty."

"That is true," said Mrs. Greville, more thoughtfully. "Are you a philosopher, Mrs. Rymer?"

"I have learned some hard lessons," she replied.

"You must try to forget them now," said Mrs. Greville, with a bright smile; "my creed is that life is meant to be one happy dream. I do not believe in philosophy or anything else that makes people dull."

"But what of real pain or real distress?" asked Silvia, somewhat startled by this novel doctrine.

"I do not believe in the need for it," replied the beautiful lady, with a gay laugh; half the people of this world make their own misery and pain."

"But what of poverty and sickness?" asked Silvia, still more amazed.

"Those are horrors, and I do not think we need make ourselves miserable by thinking of them," said Mrs. Greville with another gay little laugh. "I hope you found your rooms comfortable and everything to your taste?"

"I thought I had suddenly fallen into Fairyland," said Silvia.

"That is right. I love to see people comfortable and happy. Shall you like being my chaperon?"

Silvia looked up at the bright face with a smile of hesitation. "My only fear," she replied, "is that I shall not be of much use to you."

"Yes, you will. I do not pretend that I shall obey, or anything of that kind. I have done just as I liked all my life, and shall do the same until I die. I cannot see what life would be without freedom. However, I cannot stay to discuss these questions with you now, Mrs. Rymer; I must return to my visitors. I think it is the first time in my life that I ever found visitors tiresome."

Silvia looked at her in wonder. The bright, unshadowed face did not seem as though she had ever found anything troublesome. She held out to Silvia a white hand shining with jewels.

"Welcome to Lingholme, Mrs. Rymer," she said; "may it be your home for many happy years. And now good-night. Try to make yourself very happy and comfortable. We shall know each other better in a few days."

And for some minutes after she had gone Silvia stood in wondering amaze at the brightness and the beauty of the vision so suddenly appearing. The sweet, subtle perfume seemed to linger in the room; the sound of the laughing, musical voice seemed to linger in her ears. Then she sat down again, and began to ponder on the vanity of woman—their characteristics.

How varied were those she had known! Mrs. Thornton had clung to the shadow of an unworthy love; she died because she could not live any longer without a love that Silvia knew well was not worth the acceptance of any woman—a weak, fragile, tender soul, out of which life had been crushed as one crushes the perfume from a flower; a woman who only asked one gift from life, and that was love; whose worship was abject; who would have delighted in slavery; who wished for nothing better or higher than to be the slave of the man whose neglect had killed her. That was one type of woman—not a common one, Silvia hoped. She would not have resented words and blows from her husband, if she could only have believed that he loved her.

Then there was Lady Iantha—lofty, noble, full of poetry and romance; believing that love in itself is the highest, the noblest, the greatest gift in life; believing in it as in light from Heaven; believing it so full of truth, of purity, of nobility, that when she found herself deceived, she could no longer endure the life that had been brightened by love; it became so odious to her that she could no longer bear it, but laid it down even at the price or risk of her own soul. That was another type of woman, one of the most noble and fatally mistaken; a woman who could not break quickly, who could not endure to find life less noble than she had believed it to be.

Now another type was presented to her, the light, careless, happy, laughing woman of the world, who refused to believe either in pain, sorrow, or suffering; whose life had resembled that of a bright butterfly on the wing.

"And I am another type myself," said Silvia, with a smile; "but I am half afraid there is nothing noble about me. My sorrow was bitter enough and hard enough to have killed me; but I have done battle with it, and am living it down. What type of a woman am I?"

She was to find an answer to that question in the years to come, and in the meantime she pondered over it.

CHAPTER XLIX.

A JOURNEY IN PROSPECT.

It was not long before Mrs. Rymer felt quite at home in Lingholme. Her duties as chaperon, or lady's attendant were not onerous. They consist chiefly in looking amiable and listening to Mrs. Greville. She was required to be in the drawing-room when visitors came to dine with Mrs. Greville; to answer any letters that the beautiful young widow felt disinclined to answer herself; to go out with her to dinners, balls, and parties.

"In short," she said one day to herself, "it seems to me that I am most magnificently paid for amusing myself in every possible way."

Rather a novel way of looking at her duties, that had not, perhaps, occurred to a chaperon.

She was sitting one afternoon with Mrs. Greville, when the conversation turned upon faces.

"I love beautiful faces," said the mistress of Lingholme. "I am sure it is a fortunate thing for me that I am not a man. I should have been in love with every pretty face I came near."

"And constant to none," said Silvia.

"Certainly not. Did you ever hear of a butterfly who spent its whole existence in the heart of a rose? It loves every fair flower, sips the dew from every crimson leaf, enjoys every fragrant blossom."

"You are not speaking seriously!" said Silvia.

"Why not?" asked Mrs. Greville, opening wide her beautiful eyes.

"Because I do not think any woman could reasonably advocate inconstancy," replied the young girl.

"My dear child," said Mrs. Greville, "I am not advocating inconstancy. I never advocate anything; it is too much trouble. I simply say what I should do if I had been born a butterfly or a man."

"I think most men are inconstant enough," said Silvia. "I do not remember to have met many who boasted of great fidelity as a virtue."

Mrs. Greville laughed.

"There is a great deal of the butterfly in most men," she said; "but we were speaking of beautiful faces. I have made a collection of them—that is, of photographs of them. Would you like to see them?"

"Very much," said Silvia; and Mrs. Greville rose.

With the graceful, gliding motion so peculiar to her, she went to one of the side tables and returned with an album richly bound in crimson and gold.

"I have the portraits of some of the loveliest women in England here," she said. "If I were a flatterer, I should say that yours deserved a place among the number."

"Mine!" said Silvia, looking up with a startled glance.

Mrs. Greville laughed.

"Yes, yours," she said. "Do you know that your face is extremely beautiful?"

"I had forgotten it, if I ever knew it," replied Silvia; and there came a shadow so sad in the depth of her beautiful eyes that Mrs. Greville was startled.

"When a woman forgets her own beauty, there has been some grave sorrow busy at her heart," she thought. But one peculiarity of hers was that she seldom, if ever, gave expression to a grave thought.

"A little flattery, in that case, will not hurt you," she said to Silvia; "and there will be no harm in my telling you that I have no face in my book more beautiful than your own."

"Yet," thought Silvia, wearily, "what has my beauty done for me? Only helped to break my heart and blight my life. If my face had not been fair, he would not have cared for me, and I might have been happy." While Mrs. Greville, at her side, thought:

"Ah, my lovely chaperon has had her romance, and it has not been a happy one."

Then, sitting side by side, they examined the faces in the album. They came to one over which Silvia hung enraptured, not entirely for its beauty, but for the nobility of expression—the soul that seemed to shine through the face.

"You admire that?" said Mrs. Greville.

"I do indeed," she replied, "and yet——"

"Yet, what? do not hesitate. What were you going to say?"

"Perhaps it may be indiscreet to express my thoughts, but I was suddenly impressed with the idea that this was not the face of a very happy woman."

Mrs. Greville's attention seemed suddenly and hastily arrested.

"What makes you think so?" she asked eagerly.

"I can hardly tell you why. All people take fancies at times. There seems to be a story in that face. I could fancy the owner of it having to pass through some terrible sorrow—having a dark future and an uncommon fate."

"I hope not," said Mrs. Greville. "That is Lady Clotilde Dyncourt. I know but little of her; but her husband was once a great friend of mine. I have always liked him and admired him exceedingly. I should not like to think there was any fate but a bright one in store for his wife."

"Some faces tell their own story," said Silvia, sadly. "This is the face of a noble woman, who will look for nobility in those she loves; and, looking, not find it."

"Why, you are more cynical than I am myself," cried Mrs Greville. "Even I do not despair of finding some nobility in poor human nature. I shall watch Lady Clotilde's career with interest, just to see if your prophecy be a true one."

Silvia repeated the name slowly.

"Lady Clotilde Dyncourt! Is she an English lady?"

"Yes; she was Lady Clotilde Voyse before her marriage. Lord Dyncourt is a most charming man. I remember that I envied her when I heard that she had married him."

Silvia smiled.

"That is another of your terribly frank speeches, Mrs. Greville," she said. "That is an idea that might have occurred to many women, but few would have cared to express it."

More than once that evening she returned to look at the face that for her had so strange a charm.

How little she dreamed that the features she thought so noble, so full of soul, so eloquent belonged to the woman that of all the world she had the greatest cause to dread, to pity, and to dislike!

How little she dreamed that Lady Clotilde Dyncourt was her rival—had taken her place in the heart of the only man she had ever loved!

How little she dreamed that the time was coming when they two should stand arrayed against each other!

A sudden whim came to Mrs. Greville.

"I shall not pass the winter in England," she said. "To tell the truth, an English winter is most detestable to me. I can not support the fogs, the cold, the frost, and the desolation. Sunshine is the greatest blessing in all the world; and when one can afford to go in search for it, why not have it?"

"Where should you like to go?" asked Silvia, anxiously.

"Anywhere where the sun shines, and the flowers bloom. Let us go to Italy."

"Should you wish me to go with you?"

"Certainly. Where are your ideas of propriety, my dear Mrs. Rymer? Am I to roam about the world without a companion?"

"But," said Silvia humbly, "I am afraid that I should not be a pleasant companion."

"I have no fear of the kind," laughed Mrs. Greville. "As for languages, they are soon learned when one lives where they are spoken. If we stay away a year or two you will be a famous linguist. Then we will go through a complete course of art education. We will visit all the famous pictures and statutes in Europe. I have been educated several times, but I have unfortunately forgotten all I learned. There is no cause for delay—we will start at once."

Silvia hesitated. There was the boy. She had been pining for long months for one look at him.

"What is it?" asked Mrs. Greville, in her frank, imperious manner. "I can see a doubt in your face. What is the doubt?"

"I should like to see my little son," replied Silvia. "I should like to spend, at least, two or three days with him before going abroad."

"By all means," replied Mrs. Greville; "go to-morrow, if you will. I have never cared for children myself, but I can sympathize with those who do. If your boy were only a little older we would have him down at Lingholme. He is too young yet to pay visits. Go to-morrow, and stay as many days as you like with him; we will have everything ready to start at once when you return."

So on the morrow Silvia went. It was the second holiday in her life, and though sorrow still preyed upon her, though her life lay in ruins, her love betrayed, her future blighted, not even her fair name left her—she could not help feeling happier and better than she had done since her betrayer had left her.

The fresh air, the sense of freedom, and the happiness of seeing her child again, brought the most exquisite bloom to her lovely face. She looked so young so beautiful, so attractive in her sweet gentle grace, that she felt ashamed of the many admiring glances that followed her.

"If they knew," she thought to herself—"if people only knew my story, how they would loathe me. It is well for me that the true history of my life is not told in my face."

People might wonder why she shrank from observation; why she seemed inclined to hide from all notice; but then how few could have guessed that the lovely face hid a tragedy!

MOWAT'S CABINET.

THE Alliston Herald, an independent journal, expressed its opinion on Premier Mowat's new cabinet as follows:

The shuffle in portfolios in the Ontario Cabinet has at last taken place. The number of Ministers has been increased by one, and three new men have been taken in. Besides the shuffle of the new members a portfolio has been made making now eight ministers where formerly there were but seven. By this means much of the feeling among members at such a time is supposed to have been allayed, while the different sections of Province are supposed to be more evenly represented. Still, many will be inclined to think there must have been rare difficulties in the way of satisfying the claims of ambitious aspirants when it was necessary to add to a Cabinet already over full, and for which there evidently was little or nothing for the new colleague to do. In fact the Ontario Cabinet has generally been considered too large already for the quantity of public business there was, and the introduction of a new member with the consequent increase of salary, was scarcely in good taste so soon after the election, especially when not the slightest hint of such a a course was given to the electors on the hustings.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE formation of a board of trade in Orangeville is only a mere matter of time. A meeting will be held in the council chamber at 8 o'clock on Monday evening next, the 29th inst. Every business man should attend and make it his duty to do all he can in favor of this great boon. If the village of Shelburne can find work for a B. of T., why can't the town of Orangeville?

THE many Canadians who have gone to Dakota are said to be now coming back in considerable numbers, having been starved out. Any that come in time to help save the Manitoba harvest may have saved enough money to struggle through the winter, but now that the harvest is past we cannot look for much moving northward till spring, when it is fair to look for an appreciable immigration. This is the time for the land companies, investment companies, railway companies, and individuals who are interested in the settlement of the North west, if they are prepared to take advantage of the situation and speculate to some purpose.

THE local option clauses of the amended License Act will enable prohibitionists to win back some of the territory that was lost to them by the repeal of the Scott Act. By enabling a majority of the qualified electors of a municipality to vote away the licenses from taverns and stores the Mowat government aimed its temperance friends with new strength. The women are brought in to the fight by the clause that allows all qualified municipal electors to vote for license or no license. After licenses are voted out of existence the prohibitionists will get power to suppress the trade from the enactments of the Ontario law against unlicensed liquor selling. There can be no doubt responsibility for the enforcement of the no license law which in many districts will succeed with the aid of women's votes. Toronto Telegram.

SIR AMBROSE SHEA, Governor of the Bahamas, says the London Free Press, is now at Ottawa for the purpose of making arrangements whereby the vessels plying between Canada and the West Indies will call at his Islands. He informs the Government that the Bahamas are rapidly being settled, and the people are anxious to trade with the Dominion. They have articles to sell which we need to buy, and in return we have many things to sell, which they want. Tobago also has a commissioner in Canada on the same mission, and from the positive steps these people are taking we may rest assured the West Indies are deeply in earnest. At this time it is particularly gratifying to observe the new channels of commerce that are opening up before the people of Canada, offering, as they do, the action of our immediate neighbors. Rightly used these new avenues of trade may do much to promote the development of our industries and our agriculture, for the rapidly growing population of the West India Islands want both our manufactures and our cereals. Sir Ambrose Shea should not have any difficulty in carrying his point with the Government.

A sheep killing case was tried in Fergus on Monday before Messrs. F. Cassidy and R. Steele, J. P.s. Chas. Vrooman and Wm. Ford have adjoining farms in West Garafraxa. On Sunday 7th inst., Vrooman found Ford's dog eating the carcass of an Oxford down lamb of his, and made demand for $10 as payment for same. Ford did not admit that his dog killed the lamb, and does not think it possible that he could have done so, as the dog was in the house all night, and had been out only about an hour before he was found eating the lamb, the body of which, he says, was stiff at the time. Still, to save trouble, he had offered Vrooman $4.50. Vrooman did not see the dog killing the lamb, but says he found heat in the carcass after he discovered the dog eating it. The bench awarded him $6 damages for the lamb.—Fergus News Record.

REMAINS AS IT WAS.

THE C. V. R. CLAIM NOT YET SETTLED.

The Early-Closing Bylaw Insufficient—A $50 Grant to the Northern Union—No Water Flows in the Waterworks Supply Pipe—Brisms, Reports & Other Business.

The clerk was just reading the minutes of the last council meeting when our reporter walked into the chamber on Monday night. There was no meeting the previous week owing to a scarcity of aldermen, consequently a special meeting had to be held this week. Those present on this occasion were: Mayor Walsh, Reeve Lindsay, Ald. Green, Coleman, King, Ketchum, Bailey, Pinkney and Gillespie.

An account from the Advertiser, $43, was referred to the Printing committee.

A BY LAW THAT DON'T WORK.

Some two or three meetings ago a communication was sent in by several storekeepers on Broadway, asking the council to enforce the early-closing by-law more rigorously. The clerk communicated to the effect that the by-law could not operate against grocery stores because the requisition had not a sufficient number of signatures. The only thing to be done was to pass a new by-law. The Finance committee will enquire into the matter.

FIFTY DOLLARS FOR THE D. U.

A request from F. C. Stewart, president of the Dufferin Agricultural Society, for a grant to aid the society, was read. Last year the council was very liberal to the society giving them $100, but this year only half that amount was given.

THE C. V. R. CLAIM.

A few meetings ago the special committee, which was appointed to arrange with the C. P. R. about the old C.V.R. claim, reported in favor of letting things remain as they were, but the report was left over. At the time THE SUN contained full particulars, and every ratepayer is familiar with the case. The town receives $50 a year in taxes for the old C. V. R. grounds, and the committee were still in favor of letting things remain as they are. The report was adopted.

NO WATER.

Ald. Gillespie read two reports from the F. & W. committee. The first one recommended the nonpayment of an account, and the second one was of a more serious nature. It seems that no water can be brought down the supply pipe from Stevenson's creek, and the old race that supplies the waterworks is in danger of giving out at any time. The report recommended that the pipe be fixed immediately. Both reports were adopted.

BY LAWS.

Reeve Lindsey introduced a by-law to provide for the collection of taxes in lieu of statute labor. The amount of the poll tax is $2. Chief Shields was appointed collector and his salary was fixed at ten per cent. If a person refuses to pay poll tax he is liable to a fine not exceeding $10 and costs or in default thereof a term of imprisonment not exceeding 21 days.

Ald. Ketchum introduced a by-law to amend the dog by-law so that if a person buys a tag in another place and removes to town he can upon surrendering the tag and paying ten cents, get another from the town treasurer. Considerable time was wasted in useless arguments of what might and what not happen if the clause was inserted as it stood. Finally it was fixed up to suit everybody.

The council went into committee of the whole on both by-laws, which were read a third time and passed.

MINOR BUSINESS.

The Mayor informed Ald. Gillespie that he and the captain of the fire brigade did not bring in their monthly reports for some time.

Ald. Ketchum gave notice that he would amend the wood by-law at the next meeting.

Ald. Bailey asked the indulgence of the council for not bringing in a report of the R. & B. committee. He said he would bring in one at the next meeting.

ACCIDENT AT CATARACT.—A man named Stockdale, employed on the C. P. R., met with a very unfortunate accident at Cataract on Thursday last. In some manner he got under the wheels of a train and was so badly injured that one of his legs had to be amputated. Drs. Henry and Lewis of this town performed the operation.

A BABY'S DEATH.—The three month old son of Mr. Wm J. Corbett of this town died on Tuesday morning last. The little fellow was the pride of the household and Mr. and Mrs. Corbett are very much crestfallen over his death. The remains were interred in the Town cemetery, the funeral being attended by a large number of people.

SPECIAL SERVICES.—On Sunday next, Sept. 28, there will be three special services in St George's church, Salem, as follows:—At 10:30 A. M. morning prayer and sermon, 3 P. M. litany and sermon by Rev A. Henderson, 7 P. M. evening prayer and sermon by the incumbent. There will be no service held in Herald Angel church, Cardwell, on Sunday.

THE BURCHALL TRIAL.—Our report of the trial of J. Rex Burchall for the murder of F. C. Benwell will be found very complete and interesting. Burchall stands before a judge and twelve of his peers at Woodstock, either to be convicted or acquitted of one of the most foul murders that has ever occurred in America. The opinion prevails around here that Burchall will be acquitted.

THE I. O. O. F. ENTERTAINMENT.—The Cosgrove family filled a great musical programme in the town hall on Friday night. They played under the auspices of the I. O. O. F. of this town. The concert was first class in every particular, the performers thoroughly understanding their parts. The attendance was not as large as the occasion called for, but those who went spent a very profitable two hours.

NO WINTER UNTIL THE SWAMPS ARE FULL.—If this old saying holds good this year, winters hould be on us earlier than usual. The swamps are not full, but there is a great deal more water in them than is usual at this time, and with the advent of fairly heavy fall rains they will be quickly filled. A good old fashioned winter, with sleighing early in December, and continuing until the end of March, would be greatly appreciated.

ADVERTISING STRAY STOCK.—When a man advertises that a stray animal is on his premises, it generally happens that half a dozen people turn up to see if it belongs to them. This shows that at this time of the year numbers of animals are astray, but some men will harbor an animal for months before they will do simple justice to the unknown owner by advertising it. Farmers could save each other a world of worry and loss by being a little more thoughtful in this respect.

A DEADLY DRAUGHT

DR. JOHNSTON'S SAD DEATH.

He Took a Big Dose of Laudanum in Mistake for Whiskey and Died Shortly Afterwards.

A very sad event occurred at Horning's Mills on Saturday night last. It appears that Dr. Johnston, a clever young M. D., met a sad death by drinking laudanum in mistake for whiskey. The young man was well known around here, he having been engaged on the public school teaching staff some years ago and latterly was a student with Dr. Lewis. Everyone who knew him are shocked to think what an unfortunate manner he met his death. The following is the Globe's report of the tragic affair:

Dr. D. R. Johnston of Horning's Mills died on Saturday night from an overdose of laudanum. He was in Shelburne during the afternoon and was under the influence of liquor. He started for home at 6 o'clock, but he did not reach Horning's Mills until 8 30. The distance is only six miles. It was feared this evening that he took the wrong road on arriving at the cemetery. He was seen on the Toronto and Sydenham road, and inquired the way to Horning's Mills. This will account for the length of time it took him to reach home. Mr. Phinetz, his uncle, with whom he boarded, heard him drive into the stable, and after waiting a few minutes went out to see what detained the doctor and found him on the stable floor. He was removed to the house, and his friends worked with him for some minutes to endeavor to arouse him from what seemed to be a state of extreme intoxication. Failing in their efforts, they sent for Dr. Reid, who also practises at Horning's Mills, but every effort was fruitless. Soon the suspicion crossed the mind of the attending physician and the friends that the patient was under the influence of a

LYING INSENSIBLE,

DEADLY NARCOTIC,

so a scarcely was substituted. On examining his pockets an empty whiskey bottle, an eight ounce one, was found, also an eight ounce bottle of laudanum, of which upwards of three ounces had been taken. With this evidence before them, energetic treatment was pursued by the attendants to rid the stomach of its contents, but notwithstanding all that was done poor Johnston breathed his last about 11.30. It is supposed that he took a drink out of the laudanum bottle in mistake. When near his office he was met by a neighbor, who saw him urging his horse at full speed, in order, it is supposed, to reach his surgery quickly to get something to counteract the poison taken.

DR. DAVID RAPHAEL JOHNSTON was a graduate and medalist of Toronto University and of the Toronto School of medicine. After his graduation he practised in partnership with Dr Richardson of Ancaster for perhaps a year and a half. Three years ago this month he was admitted into partnership with Drs. Barr and Norton, who then had offices at both Horning's Mills and Shelburne. He remained with them some fourteen months, when he bought out the Horning's Mills business of the firm, and with it the residence of Dr Barr. The deceased was nearly 30 years of age, and was considered one of the cleverest young professional men in the province. A brilliant scholar, a gentleman in every respect, kind and generous to a fault, he was universally esteemed wherever he was known. His only failing was fondness of liquor. He knew his weakness, and in many ways tried to curb the depraved appetite for ardent stimulants, with but little success.

The funeral was held to-day. A large concourse of friends and acquaintances accompanied the procession to the Shelburne Cemetery. Rev. T. J. McClelland of Knox Church read the services at the grave. The whole community is shocked at the tragic end of a life that promised so brightly. His parents reside in Amaranth, a few miles from Shelburne.

ARMSTRONG VS. LEIGHTON.

Two Mono Farmers Figure in the Police Court.

A case which has created considerable interest in Mono occupied the attention of the police magistrate on Monday afternoon. James Armstrong, a prominent Mono farmer living on the Centre road, had his next door neighbor, Joseph Leighton, an equally prominent man, if not more so, summoned for an assault alleged to have been committed upon him by Leighton at a barn raising at the late Robert Jackson's on the 14th of July last. The court room was filled with interested spectators, principally neighbors of the two men, some half dozen of whom were on hand as witnesses. The prosecution was conducted by Mr Hughson, while the defendant's interests were looked after by Mr. Walsh.

The prosecutor and defendant and some seven or eight witnesses gave evidence and there was but little difference between them. It appears that Armstrong, who was late in arriving offered his advice rather officiously respecting the length of a post which Leighton was setting up. Leighton replied that he could attend to it without any ordering from Armstrong, upon which Armstrong applied a foul epithet to Leighton. Considerable strong language was indulged in, resulting in Leighton hitting Armstrong a blow on the wrist with a spade which he had in his hand. Leighton asserted that Armstrong kicked him in the stomach and that the blow given by him with the spade was in self defence. Armstrong denied this. Some of the witnesses saw Armstrong kick and some did not, while to some of them Armstrong stated that it was a blow and not a kick that he gave Leighton. There was considerable variance as to whether the blow or kick was given first, although the majority of those who saw both were of the opinion that there was but little if any difference between them. The unanimous opinion of the witnesses was, however, that Armstrong was responsible for starting the row, whether he actually kicked Leighton first or not. The whole matter, however, was nothing but a tempest in a tea pot as neither man was hurt. It would have been much better if a matter like this in which both parties were to blame had been settled out of court.

The police magistrate reserved his decision which up to the time of going to press has not yet been given.

REX SHED TEARS

When He Saw Murdered Benwell's Face.

MRS. BIRCHALL FORMALLY FREED.

The Unfortunate Wife of the Woodstock Prisoner Appears in Court to Hear the Final Disposition of Her Case—Polly Cross-Examined—His Evidence Undermined—The Victim's Brother in the Box—The Track to the Swamp—The Bridge Brothers' Evidence—Glimpses of the Theories of the Defence—The Crook Above the Court House—A "Bookie's" Prediction.

WOODSTOCK, Sept. 23.—The second day of the great Birchall murder trial was invested with not a few interesting episodes, prominent among them being the formal acquittal of Mrs. Birchall as an accessory to the awful crime for which her husband is now on trial for his life. None of the strong links in the chain of circumstances which the Crown has so tightly woven around the prisoner were weakened in any way by the cross-examinations. Mr. Blackstock and his associates are, however, doing well considering that up to the present the evidence against their client has been so direct and pointed. At the morning session the proceedings dragged very slowly along, and it was affirmed on all sides that if a better gait were not struck the trial would extend far into next week. There was a general desire at the opening of the trial that it should conclude by Saturday next, but it is not at all likely that this will be accomplished. At the afternoon sitting the crown put on a spurt and a very fair measure of speed was the consequence. Jostice MacMahon is noted for allowing the most ample latitude to the lawyers of both sides in all proceedings before him and the present is no exception to this rule. The scope of privileges for the defence is as broad and as free as the air. It required a good deal of guess-work during to-day's proceedings to attempt an understanding or description of what the defence were driving at.

FLORENCE BIRCHALL.

Mrs. Birchall was in court this morning to hear the disposition of her case, which had been before the grand jury. It will be remembered that the coroner's jury, which sat at Princeton in March last, returned a verdict that Mrs. Birchall had been an accessory after the fact. At the preliminary examination before Magistrate Hall at Niagara Falls Mrs. Birchall was allowed to go on her own recognizance and the authorities of Oxford subsequently accepted this decision. The matter was formally disposed of by the grand jury this morning, and Foreman Harrington, as soon as the court opened, went up their final presentment. This stated, among other things, that in the case of Florence Birchall, under commitment as an accessory to the murder of F. C. Benwell, they had found no bill.

This formally acquits the woman of any connection which she may be supposed to have had with the awful crime, and she is now free from further amenable or detention at the hands of worldly justice.

The unfortunate lady sat near the prisoner's dock and heard with bated breath Clerk Cornish read out the declaration of her acquittal. Her pale, anxious face plainly showed the terrible ordeal through which she is passing. She was pale as but nearly dressed. Beside her sat Mrs. West-Jones, her sister, looking the very spirituelle beauty, if not of happiness. Mrs. Jones, as she has frequently been described, is a well-proportioned typical Englishwoman of the prominent type. She wore a close-fitting blue serge suit and a black, velvet-covered toque. Her brown hair is closely cropped round and her cheeks are rosy and red presumably their natural fresh colour. Attending both women and no more than three feet away from the dock and immediately behind Mr Blackstock a chair, neither of them, for even a moment, glanced toward the prisoner.

With His Head Above the Rail.

Birchall's head was fully visible to the spectators today. A platform of sufficient height to raise his head above the rail was placed in the box last night. He writes a way his time drawing sketches of the court-room and writing notes to his lawyers. The prisoner, too, maintains his accustomed unconcerned demeanour as to what is going on around him. When the court adjourned for lunch at 1 o'clock, and after the room had been cleared of its 400 occupants, Mr. Birchall walked over to his husband and shook hands with him over the top of the rail. She asked him how he felt and he gave a satisfactory answer.

Strange indeed is the contrast between the appearance of the husband and wife. The former has gained some 10 or 15 pounds in flesh since his incarceration over six months ago, while the latter has almost shrunk away to a shadow, her face being pale and pinched almost to an alarming degree. There are those in this section, who even yet declare that the woman is merely shamming, that her looks belie her feelings, and that she is playing the shadow card to attract sympathy. With these views I certainly do not agree. I think she feels as badly as she possibly could and that her face is a true index of the anguish of her heart. Neither she nor her sister came to the afternoon sitting of the court.

Throughout the day the court room was as crowded as the limited circulation of admission tickets would permit. To the left of Mr. Justice MacMahon's chair, on the stage, all the available space is taken up with chairs, which were occupied by deeply interested female spectators. If the space to the right of His Lordship's seat were equally filled it would present a somewhat unique stage setting. As it is now it is rather lopsided. There is no immediate prospect, however, that His Lordship will permit chairs to his right, for a curtain has been strung across that end, which the court utilizes as a retiring-room, and from which he must have easy access to his "bench." The ladies, too, turned out in goodly number below, and filled many of the seats in the body of the hall and the gallery which runs across its north end.

Among the fair ones on the stage and in the gallery were—Mrs. Blackstock, Mrs. T. C. Patterson, Mrs. Stanton Fuller, Miss Sprattt, Mrs. T. H. Parker, Mrs. (Rev. Dr.) McMullen, Mrs. J. H. Charles, Mrs. Dowson, Mrs. McGuire, Mrs. Parker, Miss A. B. Hay, Miss White, Miss Beasley, Mrs. (Capt.) Higgins, Miss Ball, Mrs. Short, Mrs. (Dr.) Wilford.

One of today's visitors to the court room was Mayor Sid White of Windsor, M. L. A. for North Essex.

Rev. Burton Dean Wade, Birchall's spiritual adviser, was an interested spectator.

Mr. Cartwright and Mr. Ball assisted Mr. Osler to-day in the examination of witnesses.

It was nearly 10½ before the examination of Mr. Polly was resumed, as the young Irishman had to be dispatched by the Woodstock hack to Springford to bring over from the County of Oxford some weather-beaten advice as to the urgent necessity of an early completion of his new court house.

Douglas Polly Continues His Tale.

Mr. Polly again entered the box. He identified the letter sent by Birchall from Niagara Falls to Col. Benwell, postmarked Feb. 21, as being in the prisoner's handwriting, and also ten others received by Mellerish from Benwell. The register of the steamship Britannic was produced and the names of Birchall and his wife, witness and Benwell were recognized by witness as being prisoner's handwriting.

To Mr. Blackstock: Polly said that he would be 21 in the fall and since attending Cambridge had travelled considerably in Australia, New Zealand and Europe. He became acquainted with Mellerish through answering an advertisement and the latter put Birchall in communication with witness and as the result of various interviews the party started for Canada. The witness admitted that he took a dislike to Benwell on his own account in connection with what Birchall had said to him and in a mild sort of way he avoided Benwell in consequence. He recollected Benwell going to see some person in Brooklyn, New York, before the Metropolitan, a "down-town" hotel, without going with deceased to the door, but he did not see the person, although Benwell told him what his business there was. Witness gave a detailed account of the movements of the party in New York. Saturday they left for Buffalo and the movements of the party here were also described. It was about 6½ or 7 Sunday evening when Birchall and Benwell were copying each other's signature at the Stafford House. Witness did not look upon their actions as simplicity, but considered them very silly. Birchall was also drawing pictures.

"At which he is quite an adept" said Mr. Blackstock.

"I do not think so," was the reply.

The conversation with respect to Pine Pond took place on the voyage over. With respect to the names Macdonald and Pomeroy mentioned by Birchall, Mr. Blackstock asked, "Did you not obtain the impression from the language of Birchall that these men were all connected with the farm papillonnaire?"

"No, I cannot say that I did," answered witness.

The Men He Expected to Meet.

Witness admitted, however, that he expected to meet the men mentioned on arrival in Canada, and had since discovered that such men lived in the locality and were acquainted with Birchall. Polly stated that he received a bad cross from the customs officers at Niagara Falls to Birchall to pass Benwell's baggage, for as a matter of fact the baggage was passed on the first day of their arrival. Polly described the "kit" of Benwell, which consisted of two boxes or trunks, a gun case and three bags, which witness did not regard as a very large quantity of baggage.

Mr. Blackstock: "For a young Canadian we would consider it a rather extensive outfit."

Mr. Polly admitted that after Birchall had told him of the discovery of the cigar case in the swamp where the body of the murdered man was found, both witness and prisoner would have gone to identify the corpse had there been a train leaving during the afternoon, but subsequently this plan was changed by Birchall, and it was arranged that he and his wife should go, and Polly went to New York, Birchall agreeing to pay his expenses. Polly stated that he had seen Birchall yesterday for the first time, but while at the Metropolitan Hotel in New York he had heard of him. He identified the field boots produced as those Birchall wore when he left Buffalo. After making sundry other questions, in which nothing important was adduced, Mr. Blackstock dropped the witness.

Re-examined by Mr. Osler, witness testified that a telegram previously identified by Agent McCartney of the Canadian Pacific Railway office at Niagara Falls as having been sent by Birchall was in prisoner's handwriting. The telegram read:

NIAGARA FALLS, Feb. 25, 1890.

Proprietor Stafford Hotel, Buffalo:

Is there a telegram or letter for me at hotel? Please answer, reply prepaid. If so, send it care of proprietor Imperial Hotel, Niagara Falls, Ont.

(Sgd.) BIRCHALL.

Charles Benwell on the Stand.

Charles Benwell, brother of the murdered man, then took the stand. He was brought to this country by the crown, because his father, Col. Benwell, was too ill to attend. This young man looked anxiously through his eye-glasses at the strange court scene around him, but his evidence was not of very much importance. He stated that his brother was the youngest son and was 21 years old. His brother had been in New Zealand for a couple of years. He was perfectly temperate and his general habits of life regular. He was two inches shorter than witness, his hair-was dark-as dark as pitch, and he was clean shaven. When witness left England on Sept 4 his father was ill and unable to attend. He had fully intended to come, but on Aug 15 he was stricken down, and witness had come in his stead. Last saw his brother alive on Jan. 14 when he was preparing to leave for Canada. He had a gold plate in his mouth, and has two front teeth were gold-tipped. Witness stated that the gold plate produced corresponded with that worn by deceased. The glasses produced are about his strength. No 60 usually worn by deceased, who required a little stronger glass than witness. The gold pencil case and pencil-holder found on prisoner were recognized as the property of deceased having been presented to him by a lady friend on his birthday, Sept. 15, 1889. The date and the pet family name of deceased, "Bonny," are engraved on the case. Witness related his visit to the jail, where he opened his brother's trunks with keys handed to him by the crown. He recognized the waterproof cloak which the dead man had on as a coat which had been purchased to suit deceased in New Zealand, but which was never forwarded. Afterwards witness saw his father wearing it. He also swore to a ring produced as having belonged to his brother. Witness stated that his brother was of a careful disposition.

THE TELL TALE CIGAR CASE.

To Mr. Blackstock witness stated that his brother attended the public school in Chittenham, but did not attend the university. He was about 19 or 20 when he left school five years ago. He went to a tutor for a time, intending to take an army examination, but subsequently attended school with witness abroad in Switzerland for a year. He returned to England and abandoned the idea of entering the army. For a year he remained in England enjoying himself rowing, playing football and other sports. Then he went to New Zealand, where he remained 1½ years engaged in farming and returned to England where he remained until he emigrated to Canada. Witness could not recognize the shirt studs or cuff-buttons found on deceased.

The Track to the Swamp of Death.

Mr. William M. Davis, land surveyor, was examined at length as to the distances of the routes which Birchall and Benwell are supposed to have taken from the Eastwood station to the swamp and Birchall's return journey. The surveyor had made across the fields and the roads leading to and from the swamp were illustrated by copious plans, to which was afterwards attached a table of distances. Mr. Davis was employed by the crown to make these plans. Mr. Osler accompanied him over the ground on one of his visits to Woodstock last July. The witness gave the distance from the Eastwood station platform to the swamp, via the route which Birchall and Benwell are supposed to have taken, as 4.61 miles, and the route by which Birchall returned alone as 4.68, nearly 9½ miles for the round trip. At the instance of the crown the witness had timed himself over the course in an ordinary walk. He covered the going distance in 1 hour and 25 minutes, and the return in 1 hour and 23 minutes. He occupied in all 3 hours and 48 minutes in actual walking, a speed of 2½ miles per hour. Thus 2 hours and 48 minutes were occupied in covering the journey, leaving, according to the crown's theory, Birchall 1 hour and 32 minutes at the swamp for the commission of the crime, rifling the pockets and cutting off the marks on the clothing.

The witness was cross-examined at considerable length, with a view to showing that the house occupied by the old man Robb can be seen from the spot in the swamp where the body was found, and with a view to supporting the theory of the defence, which came out for the first time. The theory is that Benwell was killed at some place distant from the swamp and carried there by some person who intended conveying the body to Mud Lake, a considerable distance farther north in the swamp. Unable to find the trail and the fallen brush and density of the swamp rendering it impossible for a man to carry such a weight through the swamp, he deposited it where found. The witness described the character of the swamp, which he said did not differ from any other swamp. He did not think it would be difficult for any man to make his way through the swamp irrespective of the trail, but did not believe that he could do it and carry his own weight in addition.

Captain John Rose of the 34th was examined by Mr. Cartwright, and testified that it would take him 2 hours 48 minutes to walk from East wood to the swamp, where the murder happened, and back at an ordinary pace, say 4 miles per hour, on a warm day.

Richard McGuire of lot 23, Blenheim, near the swamp, told County Crown Attorney Ball that he was in the swamp near the point where the body was subsequently found between 10 and 11 o'clock of the morning of Feb. 17, and there was no body lying there then that he could see. He visited the swamp to obtain tamarac bark for his horses. There he was peeling the trees was 15 feet distant from the spot and commanded a view of it. Had there been a body there then he would have seen it. Witness described the change in the appearance of the locality consequent upon a fire in 1889. Nothing was brought out in cross-examination except that although witness remembered the ball at Duke's to Feb. 17 he could not recollect the date of other entertainments at Princeton.

The Men Who Found the Body.

Joseph Elvidge, the young man who found the body of Benwell, told of his visit to the swamp on Friday, Feb. 21, in company with his father and Mr. Herns. After working about 1½ hours towards the clearing he found the dead man lying in a [illegible] described the condition of the body etc., and identified the Blackstock coat produced as the one deceased had on. He then related the discovery of the bullet hole in the head and the notifying of Mr. Crosby, a neighbor, of the discovery. Then followed the story of the discovery on the following day of the cigar case, about six feet west of where the body lay, and the finding of a pair of eyeglasses and a cigar holder underneath the spot where his head had been lying. There was snow on the eyeglasses and cigar case, a small stub of cigar being found in the latter.

To Mr. Blackstock witness stated that his brother George first discovered the body and that Feb. 21 was the first day he had ever entered the swamp from the 3d concession line. He thought that it would be impossible for one man to have carried the body about in the swamp, and the body looked as if it had been deposited where found. Mr. Blackstock asked witness many leading questions with a view of showing that the cigar case, eyeglasses and cigar holder had been deposited there after the body had been removed. Witness, however, could not say whether the snow upon the articles was wind had fallen while they lay there or which might have adhered to them being placed there since. Witness also stated that on the day of the finding of the body a cursory look round failed to reveal the presence of these articles, but the large quantity of wood prevented a minute search.

That the defence also intend to put forward the theory that there was a struggle prior to death, and the bruises on the body were evidence of that theory, was shown by a question asked witness of the body was carried out carefully and contact of any portions of it with the trees guarded against.

George Elvidge, brother of the last witness, and who was in his company when the body of Benwell was discovered, in fact who was the man that first caught sight of the corpse, corroborated his brother's testimony. This witness picked up the cigar case eight feet northwest of the site of the body and his brother found the cigar holder and eyeglasses. Witness saw no tracks in the snow and as there had been a light fall of snow that morning and some flurries a day or two previous any tracks there might have been would have been obliterated. Elvidge seems to have discovered the body on his first visit to the swamp. He had never been there before.

To Mr. Blackstock witness stated that Robb's house was visible from the roadway opposite the entrance to the clearing. He explained that the cigar case was buried under the snow and was accidentally uncovered by the axe he was wielding. It was wet, showing that it had been exposed to the weather. The body did not appear to have been dragged through the bush.

Further Facts About the Swamp.

William Crosby, J. P. of Blenheim, described the arrival of Joseph Elvidge at his house on Feb. 21, with intelligence of the discovery of the body, and his prompt dispatch of the fact to the undertaker and the county attorney. Mr. Crosby then visited the swamp. He told the jury of the position and condition of the body, the head of which lay on a sapling and was to the south, while the face was slightly discolored. He identified the clothing produced as similar to that in which the body was attired. The hat lay 10 or 12 feet away. Beneath her head was a slight deposit of soft snow in contact and untouched, and a crust beneath. A spot of oil was discovered under the light snow but whether the oil of Princeton, was called. Mr. Blackstock objected to his testimony being based on the ground that he had been in court and heard the witnesses were being heard.

To Mr. Blackstock witness said he had been ordered out of court yesterday but had come in again to-day. The judge said he could not exclude the public from the hearing, but told him that he had been guilty of a contempt of court, doubtless by talking in an office, and he ought to be punished.

The witness proceeded to describe in detail the manner in which the body was found, portion coming in contact with the snow being deeply indented. One part was frozen about an inch into the ground, and he had to pry up the foot to release it. The bullet which had been taken from the skull of the dead man, was produced in court at the time and identified by witness as having been found near the body. The shirt and other clothing were also produced and identified by witness as having been found inside on. Witness searched all the pockets of the pantaloons and coat, and each was empty. He also described the character of the cuts made in removing the private parts of Benwell thereon. The blood was underneath the wound which had formed under the head. The presence of frozen snow and ice on the arm sleeves inside the coat was not seen when discovered and he identified the clothing produced and he identified the clothing produced. The pantaloons were never found, so far as he knew.

Witness described the walk of prisoner to Princeton on the night of Friday, Feb. 21. Birchall arranged with him for the taking of the body next day. Prisoner told Witness that he had left deceased at the London Junction at about 6 o'clock and received a letter in the meantime and said that he had left the Falls. The letter was dated London Junction and purported to be signed by deceased. Witness said that he had left Princeton on the morrow and met Birchall at the Falls. Witness said that he had been detained at Princeton and had left the body there. Prisoner told Witness that he had left deceased at the London Junction checks in the letter and instructions to Birchall to take some little things out of his baggage and send them up country to him. Asked how he was going to get the things out of the baggage Birchall replied, "Oh, he sent his keys too."

To Mr Blackstock witness admitted that at the inquest he had testified that the body resembled a man who had been seen singing Indian war songs in the Royal Hotel, that he thought he recognized the clothing as the same. He explained the reason he asked Birchall if his friend was in the habit of attending houses of ill-fame by stating that the man whom deceased was thought to be was in the habit of frequenting these places.

John Gregg, sexton of Princeton cemetery, testified to the exhuming of the body of deceased for the purpose of identification and that it looked exactly the same on all occasions.

Mr Hellmuth of the defence appeared as a cross-examiner for the first time. He failed to shake Gregg's testimony, but brought out the fact that when Birchall visited the cemetery he appeared very nervous. "He was not overcome but nervous," said the witness. "I noticed it when he stepped up to the coffin and I stepped back to make room for him." Witness did not see prisoner take out his handkerchief or observe him crying.

BENWELL'S GRAVE.

The court rose at 6 o'clock.

The Interest Deepening.

The crowd that collected in the Market-square after the adjournment of the court was about twice as large as it was last evening. There is only one exit from the court room, down a flight of stairs at the front of the building. Over 1000 people were jammed in the square craning their necks to get a glimpse of Birchall as the sheriff's officers handled him into the waiting carriage and sped off to the jail. Now that so many prominent ladies of the town have been at the trial on Monday and to-day, the desire on the part of the average female heart to gain admission to the court room has spread throughout the whole country side. This curiosity, or whatever it may be, will certainly enlarge as the case proceeds.

Mr George O'Neill, the young "rookie" who makes Woodstock his headquarters, is, so he alleges, a firm believer in Birchall's innocence. He wants to open a book on the result and says if the accused is acquitted he will raise a brass band and render Birchall an ovation.

One Buffalo Witness Dead.

BUFFALO, Sept. 23.—Michael Rosell, the night clerk at the Stafford House when the Birchall party was there, died at Suspension Bridge yesterday morning. He had not been employed on the Stafford House since spring. He would have testified to calling the Birchall party the morning of the day they were there.

A fellow clerk of the clerks at the Stafford House said that he registered the Birchall party while they were stopping at that hotel. He received a telegram from Woodstock yesterday requesting him to go there and give his testimony.

No Progress in Conference.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—It is proposed by some of the House conferees on the tariff bill that the House recede from its position and agree to pass the bill as it came from the House. Democratic conferees say that if sufficient assurances are given that the request for a conference between representatives will be heed, they determine upon a line of policy to be pursued. The Republican conferees in the tariff conference met in session again to-day for the second time before noon. After they had been at it awhile it was said there was no further progress to report.

Representative Milliken being unable to attend the conference on the tariff bill has been excused and Mr. Turner of Georgia has been appointed in his place.

The Republican conferees on the tariff bill met again this afternoon. It is understood the metal and glassware schedules have been agreed upon. As to sugar a compromise on No. 14 as the dividing line between free and dutiable sugars is probable. On binder twine a small duty, probably half a cent a pound will be imposed. This afternoon a conference was held of Republican senators who voted to put binder twine on the free list. There were present Senators Ingalls, Plumb, Purvis, Casey, Pettigrew, Stanford, Wilson, Davis, Power and Paddock. It was stated to them that the conferees on the tariff bill proposed to impose a small duty on binder twine. Nine out of ten senators named pledged themselves, it is said, to vote against the adoption of the conference report in case binder twine was taken off the free list.

THE LONG-LOST SON.

PENETANGUISHENE, Aug 24.—Eighteen years ago there lived with his wife and family, within a few miles of Penetanguishene, on the road way leading to the postal village of Randolph, a French-Canadian named Alfred Le Moreau. One day his three year-old child was missing. It was thought he had wandered off into the woods. A thorough search was begun and kept up for several days, but no trace of the lost child could be discovered. The whole country was then a wilderness of bush; and bears, wolves and other wild animals were quite numerous. It was learned that a bear had carried off the boy, and his parents mourned him as dead. Years have passed away and nothing was seen or heard of the child. The parents moved away from this part of the country and back to Lower Canada. Not long since a priest who had charge of the mission in the North-west was told by an old Indian on his deathbed that he had eighteen years before stolen a child from its home near Penetanguishene. The priest communicated with Rev. Father Labourean about the matter. Father Labourean made inquiries, heard the story of Le Moreau's lost child, had communications with the parents and this week the old couple are in Penetanguishene on their way to Sault Ste. Marie to meet their son—lost to them as a mere baby, sorrowed for as one dead, and now to be restored to them when they are old and he a grown man.

Although many foods have been recommended for young chicks, we have always had excellent success with stale bread and oatmeal, fed in the dry condition, until the chicks are ten days old, when they may then be given cracked corn and wheat screenings, also. Too much soft food is not wholesome for them. Chicks prefer dry food, and it serves the purpose better and entails less labor in preparation. Corn bread alone is insufficient, but it may be improved when dipped in milk.

A living skeleton, who rivals some of those who figure in the museums, was found by the police in a garret in Allegheny Pa., last week. He is six feet high and weighs but 45 pounds. He can't account for his loss of flesh. He declares he feels all right though very weak, and has no serious illness. He is a foreigner and unable to speak English. About two years ago, he says, he first noticed he was getting thin, but as he felt well he paid no attention to it. He continued, however, to lose flesh, and the past spring, finding himself nothing but "skin and bone," he went to the country, but neither the change nor the doctors did him any good, and about a week ago he returned to Allegheny. Being without relatives he went to the garret to await death, but neighbors hearing of the case, directed the attention of the police to it, and the man was removed to the station house, and subsequently to the City Home.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS AND OINTMENT.—Travellers to and from distant climes would do well to bear in mind that these changes and the altered diet and surroundings of their lives entail manifold risks to health. Occasions are sure to arise in which they will need a remedy such as these renowned Pills and Ointment, and no traveller by land or sea should ever fail to have a supply at hand. Thus be may truly be said to have a physician always at his call for the various emergencies of travel. Chills and fevers should be promptly treated, and the printed directions should be carefully studied at the commencement of any illness, for Holloway's remedies can be safely used in all climates.

THE GOSSIP OF A WEEK

CHAT ON TIMELY TOPICS AND CURRENT EVENTS.

The Re-organization of the Ontario Cabinet—Three New Men, Blackburn, Dryden and Rochester—Prince George at Montreal—The Toronto Fair.

TORONTO, Sept. 19.—The Ontario Cabinet has been reorganized. The Ministers will be sworn in as follows:

Premier and Attorney-General—Hon. Oliver Mowat.

Commissioner of Crown Lands—Hon. A. S. Hardy.

Provincial Secretary—Hon. J. M. Gibson.

Commissioner of Public Works—Hon. C. F. Fraser.

Minister of Education—Hon. G. W. Ross.

Provincial Treasurer—Hon. Richard Harcourt succeeding Hon. A. M. Ross.

Minister of Agriculture—Hon. John Dryden (re-entering Hon. Chas. Drury).

Minister without portfolio—Hon. E. H. Bronson.

Mr. Ballantyne will likely be elected Speaker.

Speaking of the changes outlined above, the Globe says: "Owing to the fact that Mr. Bronson, of Ottawa, is burdened with the management of a heavy and exacting lumber business, he could not without grave danger to his personal interests make charge of a department. But by entering the Cabinet without portfolio the Government and the province will have the benefit of his counsel and experience at least on questions of which he has special knowledge. And a better representative of the lumbering, timber and general business interests of the province is not to be found in the Legislature. The general interests of Eastern Ontario will also become his special concern, and that part of the province must derive large advantage from his admission to the Cabinet. The appointment does not carry salary. The precedent of having Ministers without portfolios is recognized under the British constitution and has been in use for some hundreds of years. Two Ministers, Hon. J. J. C. Abbott and Hon. Frank Smith, sit in the Federal Cabinet without portfolio, and there are such Ministers in the Cabinets of Quebec New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. It is not necessary under the practice for Mr. Bronson to go back to his constituency for re-election."

The plans for the restoration of the University, prepared by Architect Dick, have been approved of by the trustees, building committee and the senate. They place increase the number of lecture rooms by seven the number of professor's rooms by eight and add a whole range of new rooms in the basement of the reconstructed eastern wing. The girl students will have extra accommodation. A library is now being fitted up in the new School of Science, which will also supply examination halls in the meantime. President Wilson received a contribution of £500 from Edinburgh the other day toward the building fund; £100 is donated for extension of residence.

A number of Toronto gentlemen have evolved a new and original solution of the Esplanade difficulty, which is causing at much trouble between the railways and the city. Instead of the railways having the best part of the water front they propose building a tunnel under the land now being fought for. The cost of such a tunnel would be less than a million dollars, and it would be wide enough for a double track.

H. R. H. Prince George of Wales, second son of the Heir Apparent, who is in command of H. M. S. Thrush has been honoring Montreal all week with his presence. His ship and the flagship of the Admiral arrived off Montreal early last week. Ever since, the city has been wild over the excitement and heap of entertaining such a distinguished guest within their gates. The young prince has been enjoying himself. He has been banqueted, has received addresses, held receptions, attended races and a grand citizens ball, where he danced with a number of the fair ladies of Quebec provinces.

The fleet shortly returns to Halifax. So it is not likely that the Prince will be able to take a trip through the Province of Ontario, until later on.

The annual Industrial fair, for which Toronto is so justly famous is now in full swing. It was opened with much state and ceremony by the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen. His Excellency the Governor-General has also paid a visit to the city for the purpose of taking in the Show. He was banqueted at the Queen's Hotel by the Civic reception committee before he left. The Fair is a greater success than ever.

Some great and awful stories are telegraphed sensational American papers by correspondents in Canada. Ottawa and Montreal have for years past been noted for possessing the two greatest newspaper liars in the Dominion. The far West however has now been heard from. Last week several American papers contained accounts of a terrific snow storm in Manitoba and the North-West, which had ruined the harvest. This was totally untrue. An inch or two of snow fell in a far northern settlement in the North-West Territories, but did not do much damage and disappeared almost as rapidly as it came. But the champion lie of the year undoubtedly is that telegraphed on Sunday to many of the sensational Sunday editions of the great American press. The fake despatch states that H. R. H. Prince George of Wales had been on a spree in Montreal, got into a row and had been kicked up by the police. Startling headings such as "Royalty in Jail" astonished many people. It is a disgusting thing to think that the Queen's grandson should remember his visit to Canada, in connection with a malicious and blackguardly lie like this.

This is greatly to be regretted, by all right minded people. It is rumoured that an action will be entered against the Montreal correspondent who is well known.

A convention to be held in this city next month is of particular interest to the women of Toronto. It is the annual gathering of the American Association for the Advancement of Women. This is not a movement intended to secure the enfranchisement of the sex in a political sense; neither is it a temperance crusade, although on the roll of the Association are some of the best-known names in connection with the temperance and women's franchise movements. The object of the Association is simply to aid in the elevation of women educationally, socially and in the world of industry. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe is the president this year.

Mrs. Crozier, an old and respected resident of Digby, N. S., met with a horrible death through the mistake of a druggist. She had been ill for the past few days and a doctor was called who prescribed for her. The prescription was taken to the drug shop of Stark & Co. to be filled, and by mistake the clerk sent fifteen grains of strychnine. Shortly after this was administered the patient became very violent and to the horror of all present the fatal error was discovered. The unfortunate lady died in great agony a short time after. She was 72 years old, and has two daughters in Lynn, Mass., and a son in California.

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not be an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the droppings into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

T. D. D. Loyd, 8 Clarence street, Toronto says: I wish here to testify to the unequalled healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the preparations put together that I have purchased myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shall not fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM

INSTANTLY RELIEVES

Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

NASAL BALM

POSITIVELY CURES

CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my own case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm was my the most perfect satisfaction of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cents for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

THE MAPLE.

All hail the broad-leaved Maple!
With its fair and changeful dress—
A type of our young country
In its pride and loveliness;
Whether in Spring or Summer,
Or in dreary Fall,
'Mid Nature's forest children,
She's fairest of them all.

Down sunny slopes and valleys
Her graceful form is seen,
Her wide, umbrageous branches
The sun burnt reaper screen;
'Mid the dark-browed firs and cedars
Her lovelier colors shine,
Like the dawn of a bright future
On the settlers hut of pine.

She crowns the pleasant hill-top,
Whispers on breezy downs,
And casts refreshing shadows
O'er the streets of our busy towns;
She gladdens the aching eye-ball,
Shelters the weary head,
And scatters her crimson glories
On the graves of the silent dead.

When Winter's frosts are yielding
To the sun's returning sway,
And merry groups are speeding
To sugar-woods away;
The sweet and welling juices,
Which form their welcome spoil,
Tell of the teeming plenty,
Which here waits honest toil.

When sweet toned Spring, soft-breathing,
Breaks Nature's ice sleep,
And the forest boughs are swaying
Like the green waves of the deep;
In her fair and budding beauty,
A fitting emblem she
Of this our land of promise,
Of hope, of liberty.

And when her leaves, all crimson,
Droop silently and fall,
Like drops of life-blood welling
From a warrior brave and tall;
They tell how fast and freely
Would her children's blood be shed,
Ere the soil of our faith and freedom
Should echo a foeman's tread.

Then hail to the broad leaved Maple!
With her fair and changeful dress—
A type of our youthful country
In its pride and loveliness;
Whether in Spring or Summer,
Or in dreary Fall,
'Mid nature's forest children,
She's fairest of them all.

CHAPTER L.

MOTHER AND SON.

IT was with joy that was almost pain that Silvia held the boy in her arms once more.

"My little Cyril!" she cried, in a rapture of delight. "Soon, so soon, you will be little no more."

For the child was growing into magnificent strength and beauty. The young mother trembled as she looked into the beautiful face, it was so like that of her lost love. Cyril had the same handsome eyes, but in his there was no indolence, only fire, energy, and power. He had the same beautiful lips, the broad, square brow, the clustering curls, in fact, it would have been difficult to find a stronger likeness than existed between father and son.

Again and again Silvia looked at him almost in terror. No one who had ever seen Alric Rymer could fail to recognise his son.

"Nature has told my secret," said the girl to herself. "The secret that I would have kept with my life she has told."

It was more than a year since she had seen the boy, and the difference in him bewildered her. He, too, was overjoyed. Nothing seemed to weaken his love for his beautiful young mother. It was as though he had parted from her yesterday. He caressed her in his graceful, loving way; kissed her face, her hands, murmuring the while sweetest words of tenderness to her.

"There is a balm for every wound," thought Silvia, 'all my sorrows seem small while I have Cyril."

Yet it was terribly hard when he smiled at her with his father's eyes, kissed her with his father's lips—when he spoke to her in that voice every tone of which she remembered so well. So closely did it resemble her lost love's, that there were times when she started and thought he must be near. He was growing up, this boy for whom she had dreamed such bright dreams, and for whom she had now no hope at all. What would his inheritance be? That of shame and sorrow. He would have no name, no place in the world, no father's love or protection.

"You will have no one but me, my darling," she cried, clasping him in her arms. "And, oh! how I will love you, to make up for this."

She did not spend her whole time in caressing him. There were arrangements to be made for him. He was nearly three years old, and must not remain under good Mrs. Tate's care much longer.

As she sat with him in her arms there came to her no warning of the future of that child—a future of which history still speaks.

At Hampstead there was an excellent school for boys, under the superintendence of a clergyman and his wife. The clergyman himself, a learned scholar and a good man, undertook the elder pupils, while his wife managed the younger. Silvia resolved upon going to the Rev. Mr. Hardman, and placing her son under his care. She told him her husband was dead, and she herself had an engagement out of England, which might extend over many years. When Cyril was three she should like him to be taken entirely under the minister's care. Mr. Hardman looked earnestly at the beautiful face of the girl.

"I will undertake the charge," he said; "and I hope that your son may grow up like his mother."

Her face flushed with pleasure, but no compliments ever made her vain; she had always the sad afterthought.

"If they knew my story—if the world knew me for what I am, there would be no kind words for me then."

It was a great relief for her to know that such an excellent home and excellent training awaited Cyril. On the following day she took him to Hampstead House, and Mrs. Hardman was enchanted with the child's beauty. But the clergyman said little. He looked earnestly at the patrician face, he noticed the air of high birth and breeding that seemed to pervade every action of the child.

"I have seen a face somewhere," he said, "that rises before me as I look at your little boy, Mrs. Rymer."

Silvia blushed, and then felt annoyed with herself for having done so.

"I must be more careful, for my boy's sake," she thought; "for myself nothing matters. On his life, if I can prevent it, there must rest no stain. I was innocent—I am innocent; why should I blush for another's sin?"

"I should like to understand, plainly," said Mr. Hardman. "You may be absent for some years, and letters fail at times. What kind of training am I to give your son—is he to be a man of business, or what?"

She never could account for the impulse that made her answer:

"Let him have the training of a gentleman," but in after years she was thankful for having said the words.

When Silvia had quitted the house, Mr. Hardman turned to his wife.

"Rymer!" he said slowly, "I have no recollection of the name."

"Nor have I," said Mrs. Hardman; "but it is a good name, I am sure."

"And I, my dear, have been accustomed to boys too long to make any mistake. I can read the signs of race as I can read the pages of a book, and I tell you that that boy has some of the best blood of England in his veins."

Mrs. Hardman looked anxious.

"I hope it is all right," she said.

"You may be quite sure of that. I would trust that young mother's face sooner than any other face I've seen, except yours, my dear."

The lady smiled. She was a woman of sense, not disposed to give way to foolish jealousy because her husband chose to admire a pretty face.

"Mrs. Rymer is a widow, I presume," she said.

"Yes; and, unless I make a greater mistake than ever I thought myself capable of making, Mrs. Rymer's husband was one of old England's aristocrats—the boy looks as though he had had a peer for his father."

Before Silvia had left Hampstead, she had made every arrangement. She was to pay the whole of her annuity for her boy, and he in return was to receive the best education, food, and clothing. The allowance was munificent; but she wanted no money for herself. In pleased her generous heart that she should give all to her boy; it seemed to her some kind of atonement for his father's neglect.

That night, she clasped him in her arms, she covered his beautiful face with kisses and tears.

"You have but me, my darling," she said, "in the whole wide world. Your father took from you even his name. I give you all I have in the world," and that thought seemed to comfort her. It was hard work to leave him, and the young mother shed bitter tears.

"You must not forget me, my darling, she said. "You must always remember mamma."

The child clung to her as though he understood what she meant.

"I shall love you always," he said, and the words comforted her.

Then she was obliged to return to Lingholme. There she found everything ready for immediate departure, and Mrs. Greville anxious for her return.

"I hope I have not been too long?" said Silvia.

"No; to speak truthfully, I did not expect you until to-morrow. I know what mothers are with their children. I see by your face that you have been weeping bitter tears. As soon as we return to Lingholme, he shall come and stay with us."

A promise that Mrs. Greville kept, and the keeping of which involved many lives in one common catastrophe.

Then they started for Italy, and for the next three years life was like a fairy dream to Mrs. Rymer. She had always longed to travel, and for the opportunity to study. Now she had both. They visited all the most famous cities in Italy, and Silvia made a point of rising early. While Mrs. Greville was dreaming away the pleasant morning hours, Silvia was busy with grammar and dictionary. It was not long before she could read Italian as well as English, and then she began to speak it, and before Mrs. Greville thought it possible that she mastered the rudiments, she was able to carry on an eloquent conversation. Mrs. Greville was much amused at her companion's industry.

"Are you qualifying yourself for a diploma?" she asked.

"No," replied Silvia, simply; "but I should like to be clever, if I can, for the sake of my darling boy."

And Mrs. Greville, who despite her gayety and cynical philosophy, had something of a woman's heart, was touched by the answer.

There is no education so useful as that acquired by travel and observation. Before Silvia Rymer had been long in Italy, she had made more progress in general knowledge, in art, in literature, in biography, than she could have made by quiet study at home for many years. It never occurred to her that she was qualifying herself to take a high position in the great world. Her only idea was that when her boy grew up, clever and accomplished, he must not be ashamed of her. She must do her best to make herself a companion to him. Mrs. Greville mixed in the highest circles. Silvia had always before her eyes the example of some of the best bred men and women of modern Europe. No wonder she profited by it, and that day by day she gained grace, dignity, intelligence, and sweetness. Day by day her delicate beauty increased; she was universally admired, and the mistress of Lingholme professed herself delighted by the homage offered to her beautiful companion.

CHAPTER LI.

"BECAUSE I DO NOT LOVE HIM."

Four years had passed since Silvia Rymer bade adieu to England and her little son. Seldom had time worked such wonders or produced such changes as in her. She had left home beautiful and graceful, it is true—gifted with a certain kind of tact that stood in the place of cultivation; she returned one of the most elegant and accomplished women of her time.

What was ever so mighty as love?—what love so great as that of a mother for her child? Had little Cyril died, Silvia would have had no object in life—she would have been quite indifferent as to how that life was spent. As he lived, her whole mind and the strength of her soul was devoted to one object—making herself a fitting companion for him. He was to be a gentleman, this noble, princely, beautiful boy of hers, and she must be worthy of her place as his mother. For his sake she rose when others slept. She studied indefatigably; she read, thought, and pondered. For his sake she grasped eagerly at all the knowledge it was possible to acquire; for his sake she sought the conversation of wise and learned men; for his sake she toiled through the rudiments of education, she read the choicest books, she devoted every spare moment to the acquirement of knowledge. Her opportunities were great. Mrs. Greville had no thought but to amuse herself. It was always late when she rose, and Silvia, by dint of perseverance in early hours, found that she had something like half a day at her own disposal.

The result of her continual and industrious application was something wonderful. When Lord Duncount first saw her she was a lovely, simple graceful girl, something like a wild flower untrained—ignorant, pure in heart and soul, but uncultivated and crude in her notions; now she was one of the most refined and graceful of women. His beautiful soul shone in her face. There was a grace and elegance in her words; a sweet, subtle fancy seemed to dictate her bright thoughts. There were few subjects on which she could not converse with ease and fluency. In all matters connected with art, poetry and literature she was quite at home. She had a method of expressing her thoughts, at once so simple and so graceful, that the most gifted and intelligent men found the greatest pleasure in talking with her. She spoke French and Italian with ease, she could read German; she had more than a superficial acquaintance with modern literature. There was not a picture of any renown of which she did not know the history. She had always been beautiful, but the loveliness of her face deepened; it no longer consisted merely of shape and color. The spiritual, clear expression was now perhaps the greatest charm.

In short, a more beautiful, refined, graceful woman than Silvia Rymer at this period of her life it would have been difficult to find.

Mrs. Greville watched the change with great delight. She was too carelessly generous, too large-hearted to either fear or dread any rivalry. Nothing pleased her more than to hear her beautiful attendant admired and complimented.

One thing, however, in Mrs. Rymer puzzled her. Why did she invariably refuse all offers of marriage? Several had been made to her, some of them most brilliant; one from a gentleman in Florence, whose wealth and position were unexceptionable; but Silvia refused all with a quiet dignity that somewhat bewildered the gay widow.

"So you have refused Monsieur De Launo," she said to Silvia. "Do you know that he will succeed to his father's title and estates some future day?"

Silvia smiled.

"Yes; I ought to know it, for you have impressed the fact upon me every day since he first came here."

"For your own good, Silvia. Why did you refuse him?"

"For such a simple reason, that you will laugh when I tell you—because I do not love him."

"Love!" repeated Mrs. Greville in an accent of most profound contempt. "I did not know that you thought seriously of that kind of nonsense."

It was Silvia's turn to look up in wonder.

"Do you not?" she asked.

"No," was the very candid reply, with a merry laugh, "most certainly not. Where should I have been if I had even dreamed of such a thing?"

"Is it not an essential of life?" asked Silvia.

"No; or, again, where should I be? I have passed my life without it. I never loved anyone or anything except my own self."

"I cannot believe it," said Silvia, hesitatingly.

"I assure you it is true. I have a very kindly feeling for most people. When it is possible, without inconveniencing myself, I would gladly help anyone. For some people I have, I need not say, a much more kindly liking than for others; but as for love—I never did and never intend giving way to any such vagary."

"But," said Silvia, looking slightly shocked, "your husband—what of him?"

"I had the greatest respect for him," said Mrs. Greville. "He was a kind, worthy man, but love—why, Silvia, I was married before I was twenty, and he was nearly sixty. I always consider myself a sensible woman; when I was quite young I weighed my chances very carefully, and looked them in the face, and saw plainly what they were. I was well born, and bad—so the world said—a pretty face; I had good connections, and no fortune; my duty was therefore, obviously, to look out for a rich husband. I told myself that there must be no nonsense over love."

Mrs. Greville paused, to laugh at the horrified expression of Silvia's face.

"I was very systematic in my method of proceeding," she continued. "As soon as I went into society, I looked about for the wealthiest man in it. This I found to be Mr. Greville, of Lingholme, a retired capitalist, whose name was a pillar of strength among wealthy men. Almost before I saw him I said to myself that he would be the best possible match for me."

"But," interrupted Silvia, "there is no romance in such a life."

"Certainly not. Romance beautifies literature, helps to sell books; but if you want a peaceful life, keep clear of it. I frankly own that when I was introduced to Mr. Greville I did my best to fascinate him, and in a short time I had the pleasure of finding that I had succeeded; he made me an offer, and we were married. I know no two people who were happier; we never that I remember, had one disagreeable word."

"It is not given to every one to be able to crush all heart, all sentiment and desire for affection out of their lives," said Silvia.

The beautiful face glowed again with merriment.

"Because people are so foolish; poets, painters, and romancers in general are to blame for it. Believe me it is only an idea after all that the world can not go on without love. If there were less of this nonsense it would be better. Silly boys and girls get their minds filled with absurd ideas about love, and they sacrifice all more sensible notions to it. Some of the wisest and happiest men and women have lived without it, and have made no murmur over their lives."

"But," remonstrated Silvia, "you say you love yourself; is it not, at least, more noble to love another, than to concentrate all your thoughts and anxieties on self?"

"Self preservation is the first law of nature," said Mrs. Greville, "so that self love must be something like a virtue too."

"You could never lose life or reason for love," said Silvia, thinking of the unhappy ladies she had known.

"No, indeed; I value both too highly. Now tell me, Silvia, why have you sacrificed such a brilliant career as the one lying before you if you would only be Madame De Launo?"

"I am not like you, I could not marry without love. I should care little for money, for position, rank, or any other advantage, but I must have love."

Mrs. Greville laughed good-temperedly.

"You are like all other women I know, and you will wreck yourself upon some rock. Did you, then, Silvia, love your husband very much?"

The delicate face flushed and the lips quivered. Years had passed since the cottage on the Scottish lakes had been anything but a dream, but it had strange power to move her. Not one hour of that time was forgotten, not one pale, not one thrill of happiness, not one moment of the bitter anguish and shame. She remembered it all as though it had been but yesterday. Though life was brighter to her, and had grown broad

A BOARD OF TRADE.

GOOD PROSPECTS FOR ONE

Being Formed in Orangeville—Report of the Meeting on Monday Night.

A meeting was held in the town hall on Monday to consider the advisability of organizing a local board of trade in this town. Nearly all the business men attended, and considerable interest was manifested by those present. The assemblage was called to order shortly after eight o'clock. Mayor Walsh was voted into the chair and Mr Theo. Danner was appointed secretary, pro tem. The mayor explained he called the meeting at the request of a petition signed by about seventy-five of the ratepayers. He was in favor of organizing a board of trade, which, if rightly managed, would no doubt be a benefit to the town.

Ald. Ketchum followed in a short speech, stating that he took an interest in bringing the matter to a head, and if a board was organized many benefits would result therefrom.

Mr. Robt. Beatty, who is a member of the Toronto board of trade, expressed doubts as to whether the Toronto B. of T. would have control over a local branch. If such was the case he would not be in favor of organizing.

Several other speakers spoke at some length on different trade organizations.

A motion was put and unanimously carried that the meeting thought it advisable to organize a board of trade in Orangeville.

A committee consisting of T. Stevenson (chairman), Marshall Green (secretary), Alex. Johnston, Jesse Ketchum and George Endacott was appointed to obtain particulars from boards of trade of several other towns and report at another meeting.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE Government are having new plans prepared for the proposed monuments to be erected on Canadian battle fields in commemoration of the war of 1812. The necessary appropriation was made by Parliament last session. The first monument will be erected at Lundy's Lane, Niagara, to be followed by a memorial of Chaplain in Montreal.

MR. E. S. WHITE, M. P. for Cardwell, intended to hold a series of meetings throughout his constituency this week, but owing to illness he is unable to do so. Mr. White held a rousing meeting at Palgrave on Monday, and returned to Orangeville on Tuesday evening. It will be Monday at least before Mr. White will be able to be around.

SOME dozen or fifteen of the cars says the Galt Reporter loaded with barley at the old G. W. station on Tuesday, and taken out by the freight train leaving shortly after 4 o'clock, bore the following placard:—

BARLEY.

Rush me through.

McKinley is after me!

Galt, Canada

ONE of our contemporaries is struggling with the question why some men cheerfully pay five cents for a glass of whiskey, but regard five cents as an outrageous price to pay for a newspaper, which, published at great expense and labor, gives him the history of the world for a day. It really seems as if the willingness to pay is in inverse proportion to the usefulness and permanence of the article obtained. The liquor seller not only gets his prices without grumbling, but he is paid in cash, while the grocer, the baker and the tailor are beaten down to the last cent, and have to wait long and sometimes in vain for their pay.—Globe.

AMARANTH COUNCIL.

MONO MILLS.

Bob Moore is wielding the sledge again after returning from his sojourn north.

No more news this week. Nothing but fast horses and big turnips and show fairs those days.

Our village is very quiet of late. Every one is home from the city and seem to be hibernating.

Pat McCaffery has started a boot and shoe establishment on Main street and is doing a rushing trade.

We are every day expecting to see a smoke in the Methodist parsonage and perhaps we will o'er this appears before the public.

The mysterious being that has been the terror of midnight pedestrians about this locality has not been heard of for some time. Some of our citizens must have shot it as was reported.

THE EVENT OF THE SEASON.—The foot-ball club re-assembled and the boys are feeling in good spirits. Any local team wishing to test our "boys" will be gladly welcomed to do so. They have a good field to play on here and are anxious for a little fun. Has the Hockley club died or are the members taking a sleep?

GRANDVALLEY.

(From the Star)

Mr McMullen, M. P., addressed a meeting of the electors of Amaranth and East Garafraxa in Forgraves hall, Waldemar, on Monday night, on the important questions of the day. Mr. McMullen's remarks on the proposed McKinley bill was well received, showing that the intelligent electors of North Wellington are favorable to broader trade relations with the United States.

W. R. Scott, merchant, has 9 acres of land on the outskirts of the village and on this was a good crop of oats this season. Mr. Scott got a staff of men at work, superintended by Mr. Jas. Reith (his partner), and hauled in, stacked the crop, thrashed the grain, cleaned up the oats, sold them to Richardson and McIntyre and delivered them at the Grand Valley store house, all within 48 hours, having the honor of delivering the first car load of oats at this station this season. Next.

Rev. Mr. Scudamore, who for the last year and a half has earnestly laboured in this part for the Christian welfare of his parishioners, has been appointed by the Bishop of Niagara to Beamsville, near Grimsby. Mr. Scudamore will deliver his closing sermon here on Sunday and leaves for his new field about Tuesday next, 30th inst. Rev. R. J. Leake, of Gananoque, is to be the new rector and is expected to preach his opening sermon here on Sabbath evening.

A MODEST PROGRAMME.

The Pall Mall Gazette says the following letter was lately received by a lady in England who had advertised for a nurse from an applicant in Montreal: Dear Madam,—I think your place will suit me very well, as I know the advantages of travelling in widening the mind and strengthening the character generally. If I come to you I should require the use of the piano three evenings a week, to keep up my music, and on the other three evenings I should wish to go out with a gentleman friend. On Sunday afternoon and evening, when my friends usually come to see me, I should want the use of the dining room to receive them in. I should not mind taking the children out sometimes when you were especially busy, as I like to oblige, but I could not undertake it regular. Hoping to hear from you, as I am sure we shall suit each other, if the wages are good, I remain, etc. The Pall Mall is of the opinion that colonial servant "beat the record," if this writer is a fair specimen.

The London Times says the McKinley bill has shown public opinion in America in respect to economical principles to be in a retrograde rather than a progressive condition. The McKinley bill is strong meat, even for a protectionist stomach but it is cut from the same joint as the United States has grown fat on for twenty-five years past. Perhaps experience will again show that in studying axioms the Times has fallen behind those who study markets.

The formal opening of the St Clair tunnel will take place the first week in November. It is confidently expected that the Governor General, Lord Stanley of Preston, will grace the scene, and an effort will also be made to induce President Harrison to be present. As the contracts call for the completion of all work on the tunnel by the above date, unless something unforeseen occurs to prevent, the first train will pass through during the first week in November, and the grand celebration of the notable event take place.

The following barristers have been appointed notaries public for the Province of Ontario:—John Duncan Lemont, Walkerville; George Levack Bower Fraser, Ottawa; Francis Hernaman Gisborne, Ottawa; William Mundell, Kingston, Henry Douglas Cowan, Leamington; Charles Franklin Farewell, Sault Ste Marie, Francis William Maclean Toronto, Thomas George Alexander Wright, Alliston, William Logie, Hamilton.

John and Jacob Weber are still teaching a school which they opened in New Orleans in May, 1840, in which they have taught continuously, without a vacation, and with only fifteen days' intermission in fifty years to permit of a repair of the building.

Seven hundred and fifty Jewish families have emigrated from Berditscheff, Russia, during the past ten days. Rabbi Adler, of the Hammersmith synagogue on Sunday said he had received confirmation of the reports concerning Russian edicts against the Jews.

FOR CONTEMPT OF COURT.—Last Monday Eli Southorn was arrested and taken to jail for contempt of court. Some time ago Eli got a summons to attend P. M. Pattullo's court, but Eli appeared not. He only remained a short time in the cells, a friend calling around and going his bail.

NEWSPAPER THIEVES.—Several of the Broadway hotelkeepers complain that certain people come into their hotels to read the newspapers and forget to leave the papers behind them when they go out. On Tuesday one man had four of the Toronto dailies taken from his hotel before six o'clock in the evening. Forgetfulness is a very bad thing and newspaper bums should try and remember the fact.

H. S. LITERARY SOCIETY.—At the last meeting of the High School Literary Society, which was held on Wednesday evening, the following appropriate programme was rendered:

McKinley, knocked him down and the horse and two wheels passed over his body. Mr. McKinley received a nasty gash on one leg, caused by the horse's shoe, and was otherwise bruised about the body and face. The occupants of the rig paid no attention to the occurrence but drove up to the Dominion hotel, where the man who drove the horse was arrested and taken before a magistrate. The matter was settled by the party paying $10 to the injured man.—Grand Valley Star.

AN EAST BROADWAY RACKET.—On Friday evening last a young Mono farmer was coming up town pretty well laden with bad whiskey, when he met a young lady and made an insulting remark. The buxom lass stuck out from the shoulder with the right and caught the agriculturist on the "smeller," and then she ran down street as fast as her legs could carry her. A man named Hannah was coming up the street at the time and made it his business to reason with the inebriated youth, but the latter was in no muse to listen to logic. They then embraced each other, and before either of them were aware of the fact they fell through a window in Waldick's candy store. The farmer, whose name is concealed for various reasons, appeared at the police court on Monday and was fined $3 and costs.

SWINTON-WHEELOCK.—The wedding of Miss Bessie Wheelock, youngest daughter of Chas. J. Wheelock, P. L. S., and Mr. Rigby Swinton, receiving teller in the Bank of Hamilton, Hamilton, took place yesterday afternoon. The ceremony was performed in St. Mark's church by Rev. A. Henderson, M. A., in the presence of a large and fashionable assemblage, and was followed by a reception at the home of the bride's parents, Third avenue. Each of the young people has numerous friends in this town, and the reception was a brilliant affair. The bride was elegantly attired in a dress of fawn satin, and carried a handsome bouquet of white roses, and was attended by Miss Gertrude Tuck and Miss Franks, of Orangeville, while the groom was supported by Rev. Mr. Ross, formerly of this town. Mr. and Mrs. Swinton left amid general congratulations on the evening train for Hamilton. May THE SUN's brightest rays shine on them!

TOM AND KATIE.—Tom Lynn, alias "Tom Swift," etc., the drayman, and a lady named Miss Kate Campbell reside nearly opposite each other on Wellington street. Tom is a married man, but it is said he has been bothering Miss Campbell with lovelike attentions to such an extent that many spats resulted, and Miss Campbell threatened to have Tom before the police magistrate. The spats continued and Tom had the lady summoned before P. M. Pattullo on Monday on a charge of using "abusive and insulting language." The justice shop was turned into a dime comedy while the case was going on. Tom, his wife and the defendant were questioning, cross questioning and kicking up such a racket that the man at the wheel of justice could not make himself heard. Finally, above the din came the words: "I bind you all over to keep the peace." The next question was the matter of costs. "I'll not pay a cent in costs," exclaimed Miss Campbell in a high-pitched voice, and things began to resume their former shape. "I'll pay the costs myself," said the P. M., and he handed Chief Shields $1.25. And they all wended their way homewards in different routes.

PELLY'S NARROW ESCAPE

A Solemn Scene in the Woodstock Court Room.

THE PRISONER'S DEMEANOR.

Eloquent Addresses by Osler and Blackstock—The Jury Out an Hour and a Half—A Terrible Ordeal for the Prisoner—"I Am Not Guilty of the Crime, My Lord"—The Prisoner Back in Jail Before One and Put in Charge of the Death Watch—Premotions Against Suicide.

WOODSTOCK, Sept. 29.—The fate of John Reginald Birchall was solemnly sealed at exactly midnight tonight, when the jury brought in a verdict of guilty of the wilful murder of Frederick Cornwallis Benwell in the lonely Blenheim swamp on Feb. 17 last. It just took the jury 1½ hours to make up their minds, although it was supposed by many when the court room was finally cleared at 10 o'clock that they would remain out for three or four hours. The jury were unanimous on the first ballot, but they discussed the matter for over an hour before coming to their final decision. The court room itself was utilized for the purpose of relieving the verdict and the big crowd were bundled out into the chill atmosphere with very little ceremony by the posse of constables. Birchall when the room was cleared was whisked away to the jail. At 11¼ precisely Deputy-Sheriff Perry tripped across the square to the O'Neill House where Mr. Justice MacMahon was in waiting in his room. The deputy informed the judge that the jury had agreed and in 10 minutes His Lordship was back in his seat on the stage. There was a rush for places in the court room after His Lordship entered the room. Although it was so near the witching hour of midnight half-a-dozen ladies were fortunate enough to squeeze into the room among the 400 or so of men.

Birchall was brought back to the room at exactly 11.48. He was securely handcuffed to Constable Marshal Anderson. When he sat down in the dock it took the constable nearly five minutes to remove his 14-fitting manacles. The prisoner's face was white and blanched, and he seemed to realize that it was all over with him. After the names of the jury had been called Clerk Cantell, amid breathless stillness, asked: "Gentlemen of the jury, have you agreed upon your verdict?" George Christopher, the most intelligent-looking man on the jury and who was elected foreman, rose and said: "We find the prisoner guilty of the murder."

Mr. Hellmuth asked to have the jury filed and this was accordingly done. Asked if the twelve agree was called out to Lordship's question "How say you? Is John Reginald Birchall guilty of the offence charged?" Each one of the twelve answered, "Guilty."

Mr. Hellmuth: "Your Lordship in the absence of Mr. Blackstock, who is unable to be present, I am sure in the crown reserve a vote of thanks of the into direction of the officers of the jury."

His Lordship: "I see no reason to reserve a case."

Mr. Osler: "I move for the sentence of the court."

All eyes were turned towards the doomed man, and in a solemn voice Judge Burwell told the prisoner to stand up. Birchall did so promptly, his face looking ghastly pale, but he did not seem to have a muscle. He fixed his eyes steadily on the judge, who re-adjusted the glasses on his nose and commenced to read the sentence. His face had grown pale but with somewhat of a tremor in his voice. It was Justice McMahon first addressed the prisoner. His Lordship said: "Have you to say why judgment should not be pronounced on you for the crime of murder that you have committed?"

The prisoner looked more intently if possible at the jury and in a firm and clear voice replied: "I say that I am not guilty of the crime, my lord."

His sentence hinged on with something of a sigh of relief.

His Lordship then addressed the prisoner as follows: It is part of a solemn and painful duty that devolves upon me as upon the remainder of the court for the felony of which you have been convicted, and of which you say you are innocent, I fully concur in the verdict which has been returned by the jury on the most careful consideration. You have been defended with great ability, and there has been no point connected with the defence that has not been fully brought before the jury and discussed upon them with all the force and all the ability that human language could command, and which I say that I may say also that I feel that the case has been tried in a manner which has been creditable to the bench of the Province of Ontario, and which has been creditable to the bar of this country, and which has been conducted and prosecuted and carried out the murder of a young man who had been invited to your home and had taken shelter. It was your duty and your bounden duty to have left after a old unoccupied him. Notwithstanding that, without any compulsion you accepted of your hospitality to take his life and to reap the pecuniary reward that you thought was to be obtained by seizing the plunder of the blood money which you would get by the credit and the advantage that would come from England and the property which you immediately took possession of. It is unnecessary to think that, along with the education you possess, you are intelligent enough to doubt you must have had to further your own material interests, you should so far have forgotten yourself as to pursue the course which you have pursued and I do not see that you could have prepared to dip your hand into the blood of your fellow man. It is in fearfully to think that after such a short period after you became a married man and became connected with an estimable and respectable family you should have brought into trouble and misfortune on them. I can hold out to you no hope whatever of any commutation of the sentence I am about to pronounce. There is, I may say to you, not a clear time in which you can be permitted to live, and I earnestly implore you to take advantage of every hour that remains to insure your pardon by supplicating the Throne of Heavenly Grace for forgiveness of offences committed by you in the flesh.

The Sentence of the Court.

upon you, John Reginald Birchall, is that you be taken hence to the place whence you came, and that there within the walls of the prison between the hours of 8 o'clock in the morning and 8 in the afternoon on Friday, Nov. 14 next, you be hanged by the neck until you are dead, and may the Lord have mercy on your soul."

Birchall did not stagger, nor did an audible sylla de escape from his lips. He sank back calmly in his chair in the dock, while the spectators flocked around his box or pushed over the top of the rail at the doomed man. He did not look to the right nor to the left, but simply gazed ahead of him. Mr. McKay and Mr. Hellmuth walked over to him and clasped hands with both of them, adding a pronounced, "Thank you gentlemen."

Once more it became necessary to clear the court room. The jurymen mingled with the spectators and seemed glad once more to breathe the air of freedom after their eight days of confinement.

Fifteen minutes after midnight Birchall found himself back in the jail with the death watch placed upon him. It was whispered throughout the crowd that he would commit suicide, but simple precautions have already been taken at the jail to prevent it. He was then given a powerful opiate by her physician to quiet her nerves. But the awful news was subsequently broken to her by Mr. Hellmuth.

Thus ended this court chapter in this sensational case.

FEATURES OF THE DAY.

Scene of the Violence in the Court Room—Some Sympathetic Scenes.

Among the early arrivals at the court room were Dr. MacMahon, M.L.A. for North Wentworth, and brother of the presiding judge. The doctor reached town at 6 o'clock this morning, coming from the West.

Mrs. Blackstock arrived from Toronto at an early hour and was present all though the long session of the court.

The addresses occupied five minutes more than 11½ hours in delivery. Mr. Blackstock spoke for 3 hours and 10 minutes, Mr. Osler for 4 hours and 10 minutes, and His Lordship for 2 hours and 15 minutes. The speaking lasted from 8.55 a.m. to 9.55 p.m., with a short intermission for lunch.

All through those long and anxious hours the prisoner sat with his eyes riveted on the speaker, as the case happened to be, or on the jury. Only his head was visible above the top of the rail of the dock, and his face wore an anxious and frightened look all through the lengthy ordeal. For an hour at a time he sat with fixature-like pose of the head, appearing at intervals as if he were attempting to mesmerize the twelve good men and true. Very few of them, however, returned Birchall's anxious stare. They sat nervously in their chairs, drank copious draughts of water handed them by the constables and seemed wrapt in nothing else but the words that fell with measured pace first from Mr. Blackstock, then from Mr. Osler, and last of all to the stern judicial phrases of His Lordship. After the shades of night had gathered over the court room the gas was lighted and still the lawyers' recital of the remarkable circumstances surrounding the case went dramatically along. Outside in the square there was a dense crowd, and they howled and yelled themselves hoarse in revenge for not being admitted to the already crowded room. Their unseemly disturbances did not in the least appear to disturb the judicial serenity of Mr. Justice MacMahon as his court, for it was while His Lordship was speaking that the throng outside yell of their loudest.

Occasionally Mrs. Birchall and her sister, Mrs. West-Jones were in the court room during the speech of Mr. Blackstock and they sat immediately behind his chair. They, however, left the room when the gentleman had finished his speech. Mrs. Birchall, haggard looking at all times gave way to the melting mood when Mr. Blackstock feelingly and pathetically referred to the garland of widely devotion that invested all her actions towards her husband since his arrest seven months ago. The scene in the crowded court room during the recital by Mr. Blackstock of this touching reference to the unfortunate woman, for one can say that she is not unfortunate, is beyond the pen of a scribe. Many of the ladies in the room looked toward the unfortunate lady sister with sorrowfulness and proffered sympathy, but the poor creature heeded them not. Her thoughts were God only knows what—probably they were recalling once happy home in far-off England, perhaps in her husband's hardy end, perhaps the black shadow of a hideous gibbet filled her soul with horror and dread. No one in the room seemed to more thoroughly appreciate the situation than Mr. Blackstock and the legal gentleman who so ably assisted him in the defence, Mr. Hellmuth and Mr. G. McKay.

No counsel ever went into the task by explaining away to a jury the iron chain of circumstances with more earnestness, with more genuine wholesome feeling in his countenance, than did the young advocate from the Queen City.

In strange contrast was the expression on the countenance of Mr. Osler. He seemed like an old warrior who was about entering battle which he had already won, like a fine horse who looked with contempt on his fellow competitors. But, virtual, his labor as not harsh or spiteful in presenting his facts and leaving them up with the experience of an old court campaigner.

The judge, it was convicted from the outset, while he no doubt spoke to the jury as another would to a class of pupils acted as if it was a foregone conclusion and that to him the fact was determined that the strong arm of law had descended upon the prisoner, and that it was his duty to assure the jury and Canadians ought to be extremely thankful that they had no more cross with this terrible crime than bringing the guilty man to justice.

Farmer Costan Gets a Send in Court.

At exactly 10½ o'clock Mr. Justice Macmahon came out upon the stage and took his seat upon the "bench." The chairs which had been placed so conspicuously in the left of that of His Lordship had been removed, and the favored ladies who occupied these chairs had to seek seats in the body of the court room. Therefore there was not much the wife to stage to itself, with no one else to share the limelight, if there had been such an adjunct to this theatrically-set scene.

His Lordship, turning to Mr. Blackstock, said: "Any evidence?" "Yes, my Lord," was the reply. John McPhailen, a Canadian Pacific telegraph messenger, stepped into the witness box and testified that he delivered the telegram from the O'Neill House, addressed to Birchall, saying there was a letter and telegram for John Costan to Mr O'Neill, clerk of Bannockburn, signed Hotel.

Mr. Blackstock said that since Saturday a new witness had appeared on the scene. He had an affidavit to the effect that James Costan, a farmer living 8½ miles from Princeton, could give some evidence in the case. His Lordship said he might be called and he was sworn. Costan was a far-to-near Princeton. He recited the circumstance of the body being found in the swamp, the Tuesday evening, a week a young man, apparently about 30, a stranger and well dressed, called at his house and asked to remain over night. He said he came from Brantford and wanted to go to Woodstock. Witness told him he could not stay. Prisoner said he had applied at many of the houses along the road and they refused to accommodate him. He also asked if there was any meals near. He afterwards saw the body of the man found in the swamp, but could not hear any resemblance to the man witness saw.

It was quite apparent that Farmer Costan had resented to this rise to gain admission to the court-room and get a good seat. Mr. Osler did not deem it necessary to cross-examine the witness.

George Patterson, who took the depositions at the Princeton inquest, was called to prove these. To Mr Osler he said he did not take question and answer, but wrote it in narrative form, and he generally had to put down his own interpretation of the evidence as given by each witness.

The register of the Metropolitan Hotel, New York, was put in, which showed that on Feb. 15 last, Birchall, his wife, Pelly and Benwell were all registered at that house, written, as stated by Mr. Blackstock, in the prisoner's handwriting.

The Effort of His Life.

Mr. Blackstock, although he seemed to be laboring under a great load during the first hour of his address, gradually became easier in the presentation of his facts. Everyone who listened to the address admits it should be counted as the effort of his life to the jury. He did not enter into [illegible] frequently remarked that he would [illegible] his explained away, one by one [illegible] his views, the strong links [illegible] stantial evidence. Mr. Blackstock throughout was of that strong and [illegible] kind. He fastened his eye constantly on the jury, very seldom looking towards the prisoner or around the court room. Birchall followed his counsel's remarks with the keenest of interest, and his gaze towards the statuary young advocate who was engaged in the task of saving his neck from the rope was never diverted for an instant. Mr. Blackstock's face was pale and he looked careworn, like one who had not up for a couple of nights preparing his herculean effort, but no exhibition of signs whatever of fatigue during the whole time of his address, which lasted exactly 3 hours and 10 minutes. He did not stop without paying a clever compliment to the ability of Mr. Osler, who, he said, was always found on the side of defending prisoners, and it was worthy of remark that he should now be engaged on behalf of the crown. His Lordship, too, was painted to the jury as a gentleman who had made his mark at the bar, both as a prosecutor and as a defender, and he bespoke from the bench every fairness and consideration for his client. There was not a sob in the court-room during Mr. Blackstock's telling speech. There was no effort at applause, for, no doubt if there had been, it would have been promptly suppressed. Mr. Blackstock took occasion to scout detectives generally, and John Murray in particular, not because of the way that he had worked up the case, but evidently because of the thorough manner in which that officer had worked up his case for the crown lawyers.

Mr. Osler's address was just one hour shorter than that of Mr. Blackstock.

Mr. Osler, who is such a familiar figure before juries all over the province, adverted to his old practice of getting directly opposite the 12 good men's faces and talked all through those long hours to the jury and the jury alone. He appealed as sympathetically for the prisoner's conviction, as he has on many occasions pleaded for an accused man's acquittal of some serious crime. As in his opening address, Mr. Osler carefully went over the whole circumstance of the crime, its motive, how it was committed and how an effort had been made to cover up all tracks of the deed.

Mr. Osler also took occasion to defend Detective Murray from the onslaught made on him by Mr. Blackstock, holding that the Government officer had worked up the evidence on behalf of the Crown in a clever and astute manner. "The hatred of Murray by the prisoner was reflected through his counsel," declared Mr. Osler.

The crown prosecutor left the jury emphatically that he had no doubt of the prisoner's guilt and he asked for his conviction on the overwhelming chain of circumstances presented by the crown.

His Lordship's address was a general review of the evidence, during the course of which he fully instructed the jury on points of law.

THREE STIRRING ADDRESSES.

Mr. Blackstock Holds the Floor for Over Three Hours.

Mr. Blackstock then arose to deliver his address to the jury. He said: However feeble and inadequate my own capabilities may be I have every hope of receiving your indulgent sympathy during the address. A solemn and imposing scene is being enacted: you are participating in the gravest, most responsible and most awful function which civilization presents to the human being; you are debating the question of life and death. Society, for its own protection, has said that under certain circumstances it has the right to step in and anticipate the messenger of death; that though God gave life man has a right to take it. There are in this community, as well as in many others, a large faction who maintain that under no circumstances should society have the right to forfeit human life, and many states have abolished capital punishment. We live in a country where the law still enforces the death penalty, and which we should uphold the law the only justification for its existence must be the highest necessity founded upon the strongest proofs. A vast proportion of the evidence submitted was such as could only be challenged upon oath in the box, but the prisoner was not competent to enter the box in his own behalf, the law did not permit it, it conferred upon him the privilege of counting the statements of the witnesses if he could. Another difficulty was that a large proportion of the evidence was of circumstances far removed from the present moment—some of it took place in England. A considerable portion of the evidence was sprung upon the defence and they were unable to secure testimony to refute it. Another chapter in the narrative of difficulties has been

The Attitude of the Press.

I would be the last person to prescribe the liberties of the public press, but if a verdict of guilty is pronounced by you, gentlemen, it will not be upon the evidence, but because the dragnet of the newspaper has been spread through the slimy slough of innuendo and insinuation. The human mind is not so constituted as to be able to discriminate the testimony given in the witness box from what they had read or been told, consequently the jurors would be unable to eliminate entirely from their minds some of the false impressions they have formed on the incipient stages of the case. In making use of this language I do not wish to condemn indiscriminately the work done by the newspapers. Some of the work was good work. In my own opinion all the honest detective work in this case has been done by the newspapers. While I claim that the right of the press to publish a fair account of all the facts, it was not their province when a man was on trial for his life to publish the whisper of innuendo that had come into the box to seal the testimony with the oath. The expensive and extensive preparations made by the Crown were referred to. The defence had no money to bring witnesses from England, to bring testimony from Nevada, or with wants to purchase the Zillers. While the testimony of many of the witnesses for the crown was open to ridicule and dishonesty, he defied anyone to point a finger on a witness for the defence who showed indication of untrustworthy. The witnesses for the defence had found themselves crippled at every turn because they had not the funds at their disposal to bring the witnesses against connected with the case. They had interest and sympathy enough for months, because having undertaken the case of the prisoner they felt constrained to leave no stone untumed to see that justice secured justice. All the circumstances combine to ask you to bring upon this case your fidelity and clear intellects. It is not a question of power which is on trial. The institutions of the country are on trial. It is for you to say whether we shall return to medieval times, whether the newspapers or a jury shall try a case. I therefore ask you to sift the plummet line of your intelligence and your honesty to the bottom of the evidence, for I tell you my client has been plundered for a crime of which he is innocent, but is endangered by indulgent passions and prejudices to which no prisoner in any court of justice has ever been exposed. After explaining the duty of the advocate [illegible] and the utter unreliability of [illegible] tony of detectives, Mr Blackstock confidentially jurors that if in the conduct of the case there had been faults of temper, faults of taste, if one witness had been unfairly pressed or another too harshly dealt with, he felt the least of censure fell upon the prisoner, but upon the shoulders where it belonged, the learned counsel. The prisoner's counsel were not to blame, but that Birchall was not on trial for the honesty of his conduct, and he [illegible] that, unexplained, the dealings of the prisoner with Benwell were consistent with a innocence. The dealings were made [illegible] he had made statements to induce the Benwell to come out to his country which were not in accord with the facts. It appears that he was endeavoring to get somebody else out here to furnish the capital with which to start a business, and brought him here on false representations as to his business. But you have no right to take into consideration the honesty or dishonesty of these dealings. I do not, therefore, defend him upon these points; first, because it should be at a loss to do so, and secondly, because it is not the charge in the indictment.

Sifting the Evidence.

Mr. Blackstock then proceeded to review the evidence with respect to prisoner's statements to Lumberman Hall, Operator Plemister and Captain Cox. I do not say that the witnesses were dishonest, but I do say that [illegible] into account the frailty of human memory and that a little difference [illegible] Let me point to two cases [illegible] Hall was put in the box and told [illegible] told me that he had a letter from [illegible] seeking a baggage receipt and he [illegible] at Paris on his way down." [illegible] prisoner likely said to Hall [illegible] from Benwell enclosing a money [illegible] I then passed the [illegible] of Oxford Benwell. [illegible] Hall imagined that [illegible] Take another case. Daly [illegible] prisoner spoke often of Pine Forest, [illegible] was within easy drive of Niagara Falls [illegible] asked Pelly if he mentioned Niagara Falls and he said yes. I asked him if he [illegible] Woodstock and he said yes, and I have [illegible] the slightest doubt in the world what [illegible] took place was that the prisoner [illegible] speaking of Woodstock and [illegible] Falls when Pine Forest was mentioned.

Was the Prisoner at Eastwood?

Mr. Blackstock then proceeded to [illegible] the case under two heads: "Was the prisoner at Eastwood on Feb. 17? and if so, what was the nature of the business that brought the prisoner and Benwell unquestionably to Buffalo on Feb. 17. The crown [illegible] brought witnesses to show that the prisoner was at Niagara Falls for Eastwood. Why were these witnesses not produced, and why was not the man who is said to have sold tickets to Benwell produced as a witness? Is it because the evidence will not fit? The difference in stories of identification told by Conductor Poole at the inquest and at the trial is a fact that he had originally testified that a piece of baggage was put off at Eastwood checked and at the trial stated that it was not, were admitted to the latter instance, the learned counsel said, either due to the fact that conductor Poole found out by hearing the evidence of Eastwood that no piece of baggage was checked off there. He asserted that it was unlikely that other Pelly, Benwell man May or Nevin Agent, Pelly used to meeting hundreds of people a day, would be able to recognize a person whom they had seen but once in their description of nothing were the prisoner did not tally with the description witnesses, any more than did the description of the complainant and weight of the man. Duffy was a prisoner and other witness was Smith, what [illegible] saying anything of the kind? If [illegible] committed a crime prisoner would [illegible] likely to say anything. He would [illegible] hide. With respect to Mr. Lockhart's Miss Choate one would like to [illegible] unmanlike terms, but is it possible not to [illegible] spectable women with the word and [illegible] jaunty with feelings of manner, try to [illegible] away the life of this man? That gentleman [illegible] the mendacious of human nature. He would rather consign this prisoner to a [illegible] grave than admit that he had been [illegible] until you present them [illegible] proving it. Contrast [illegible] Choate and Conductor [illegible] stated that they and [illegible] presence of prisoner [illegible] next discussed [illegible] the history of Miss Choate [illegible] Mr. Blackstock. At the request of the said [illegible December 29, 1889, written by Birchall to [illegible] Benwell [illegible] ten to twenty [illegible] farm in Ontario, and mentioning that [illegible] Cuber. Conceive [illegible] (that letter. There was no ex- [illegible] the mind of the prisoner to [illegible] Canada and [illegible] Ask yourself [illegible] as possible in the [illegible] prisoner as to how he was going to get that £700 without farm, without business, without any of the possessions he represented he had. The next date is Jan. 27. Between these letters there had undoubtedly been conferences between these parties, which we are unable to give you owing to the illness of Colonel Benwell. In this letter he prepares the mind of the father for his prisoner's correspondence as to the business of the "company." Every line of the letter intimates that Birchall would be the corresponding member of the firm, not young Benwell. Knowing that he wasn't going to have a sale in March suggestion made undoubtedly to appeal to young Benwell's love of gain, intimating as it did that he would receive a share of the profits, the jury have a right to accept the view that this was part of the scheme proposed by the prisoner to get that £700. It could not be got in a lawful way, for the material did not exist upon which it was to be advanced.

Its Termination was the Swamp of Death

What was the object of that scheme, what termination could it have except the Bluebeard Swamp!

Mr. Cuber then took up the embarkation of the party on board ship. Polly ascertains that Benwell is going out, apparently on the same mission, to become a partner. Appealed to, prisoner tells Polly, in direct contradiction to what he has told Colonel Benwell, that young Benwell is merely going out to be placed on a farm and that he would get rid of him as soon as he could. Prisoner's glowing description of his alleged farm at Niagara Falls proved to be entirely unfounded with his visit here under an assumed name and not for any good purpose, and the fact that he was a bankrupt referred to. Prisoner's stories to Underbraker, Swarts, to Constable Watson, Operator Fleemster and others were also mentioned under the head of the relationship of the parties and the object of the murder. He had got all he was to get from Polly, the £150, and could afford to laugh at him. That's the distinction between the two young men.

The Letter of Guilt.

Take that situation and the letter of Feb. 8—a letter written two or at the outside three days after the death—a letter that you cannot study too much. That letter was written by a man who had had shown himself a fool in any other correspondence. That letter was not written to be followed by another from the same a day or two, stating that there was no business, no fortune—that he had been defrauded, take it, gentlemen, and read it between those lines, and the word you read, gentlemen between these lines is MURDER. The man who wrote that letter knew that the right hand of Col. Benwell's son would never more communicate with his father; he knew that that son was cold and stiff in death; he that letter it states Benwell had inspected the books. Where are the books? It says he had consulted a lawyer in London. Where is the lawyer? It states that prisoner had introduced Benwell to several persons. Who are these persons? Why is there no explanation given?

He Could Have Drawn the Money All Right.

He met the argument of Mr. Blackstock that, inasmuch as Birchall in his letter requested Col. Benwell to send the money to the firm he would be unable to get the money if Benwell was dead, by pointing out that the letter requests the money to be sent to the firm of Birchall & Benwell, so that either member of the firm could get the money without the presence of the other. On the correspondence, coupled with the return of prisoner to Buffalo accompanied by Benwell, with that telegram in his own handwriting signed Bastell, he claimed that he would have a right to ask for a conviction of this man without the slightest evidence as to the journey, and as to the prisoner's identification. The burden is upon the prisoner to show where he was on Feb. 17. Where was he? Why, gentlemen, my learned friend and his [illegible] warmed. My learned friend knows that at this time of the case the prisoner has a right to stand up in the dock and make an explanation of the circumstances to the jury any plausible tale he likes and I cannot cross-examine him. He stands, although his life is trembling in the balance. He prefers to remain silent and seek to overrule the evidence of the crown, construed upon little disagreements. It was upon him to show where he was, with whom he dined, not in all that Niagara country he cannot find a man who will come here and say "I saw him." He made an arrangement to send a telegram at 2 o'clock.

And now as to the identity! If you believe any one of these witnesses as to prisoner having been identified in any spot it covers the whole journey. The crown does not have to trace him all along the journey. Can you say to yours if that Mr. Blackstock and these people are mistaken and that I conducted them wrong? Do you take the responsibility of rejecting their testimony? Lewis & Alfred Hayward, whom Mr. Blackstock has particularly selected out for cross-examination. What material has he in the matter? Good to test the truth? And yet he chose to [illegible] put out a grey constable with a mass of hair from his gallery, [illegible] to confront the defence in court. He slowly recognizing a man whom he knew as Somerset in Islington. Gentlemen, pick out your witnesses to guess from the near scale in Islington. [illegible] Witnesses whom he knew in Islington [illegible] the swamp. So that if [illegible] Eastwood at 11 14 and [illegible] per hour, which is [illegible] per hour, the latest he could have been [illegible] at that he had a [illegible] 25 minutes. [illegible] Dressing [illegible] left the swamp in time to catch [illegible] the latest he could have been [illegible] at that time. [illegible] some of that time [illegible] some of it was [illegible] and no may have lost [illegible] journey. But [illegible] for the devil, [illegible] the clothing and [illegible] the return [illegible] the evidence of two witnesses [illegible] identifying the prisoner [illegible] Now there is a peculiar [illegible] of Alice Smith. [illegible] the rigorous attack of my learned [illegible] give you the impression [illegible] was not telling the truth. [illegible] identification by a passing glance. It is the identity of the individual [illegible] who knew the man but [illegible] months before. [illegible] was Dudley and which was [illegible] This is just one of the little things [illegible] can be told the witness is telling the truth. If she has made up the story she would have no preliminary doubts.

[illegible] weather. The fall of rain on Wednesday night the 16th was so slight that the rain gauge at the Woodstock observatory did not catch it, but the coat [illegible] the victim caught it all or enough to make a small cake of ice therein. On the Monday night there fell 44-100ths of an inch of rain [illegible] the air below freezing, and that filled the sleeve and inside the coat with ice. There was no blood on the sleeve or cuff but too crust had to be broken through, and there was the testimony of the dead written by nature itself making herself up in testimony against the accused.

The Judge's Summing Up.

His lordship began his solemn charge to the jury at 5.20 precisely.

At exactly 6.25 the lordship gave the case to the jury and the court room was cleared in a short time to enable the jury to consider their verdict.

In a thousand new claims, she still wished she had died before she had discovered the perfidy of the man she loved and trusted.

Other and more perplexing thoughts had come to her. She was present one evening at a brilliant reception given by an English prelate at Rome, and the conversation turned upon a great law case that was just attracting the attention of all England. It was of an English gentleman who had married in Scotland a beautiful and accomplished woman, whom he had professed to love very dearly. He had married her in the presence of witnesses, according to the Scotch formula. They had been known as man and wife for some two years, and now, upon his accession to higher rank and title, he was endeavoring to set the marriage aside.

Poetry.

OCTOBER.

See how the great old forest vies
With all the glory of the skies,
In streaks without a name;
And leagues on leagues of scarlet spires,
And temples lit with crimson fires,
As palaces of flame!
And domes on domes that gleam afar,
Through many a crimson bar,
With azure overhead;
While sorts, with towers on towers arise,
As if they meant to scale the skies,
With banner bloody red!

Here, orange groves that seem asleep,
There, stately avenues that sweep
To where the land declines;
There, starting up in proud array,
With helmets flashing to the day,
Troop upon troop of pines!
Here, evergreens that have withdrawn,
And hang around the open lawn,
With shadows creeping back;
While yonder giddied hemlocks run
Like fiery serpents to the sun,
Upon their gleaming track!

And, in the distance far apart,
As if to shame man's proudest art,
Cathedral arches spread;
While yonder ancient elm has caught
A glory, 'yond the reach of thought,
Upon his hoary head.
But every object, far and wide—
The very air is glorified—
A perfect dream of bliss!
Earth's greatest painters never could,
Nor poet in inspired mood,
Imagine aught like this.

HE READS ON THE STREET.

The woman with the parasol is difficult to pass;
The baby buggy's hard to get around;
While the fellow who forever turns toward the left, alas,
Arouses in us hatred most profound.
But there's another fruitful source of weariness and woe
Which every now and then we're forced to meet,
You're apt to run across him anywhere you chance to go—
The man who reads his paper on the street.

He boldly stalks ahead, the while his eyes are quite intent
Upon the paper held before his gaze,
While those who chance by accident to jostle him are sent
With thoughts indulgant upon their ways.
If we by fate were called upon to make a sacrifice,
The edict we would very gladly meet.
'Tis safe to say that afterward there'd never greet your eyes
The man who reads his paper on the street.

What is a Day's Labor?

ONE day's work for a healthy liver is to secrete three and a half pounds of bile. If the bile secretion be deficient, constipation, ensues; if profuse, biliousness and jaundice arise. Burdock Blood Bitters is the most perfect liver regulator known in medicine for preventing and curing all liver troubles.

POULTRY NOTES.

Do not let the chicks get wet.

Try to learn something new this year.

Look out for the rats, they carry off eggs.

Chop up the onion tops for the young chicks.

Grow your growing stock as rapidly as possible.

Over fat hens will die unless speedily reduced.

Don't have a man about who "knows" to re than you do.

A teaspoonful of sweet oil is excellent in cases of cold.

Eggs over three weeks of age do not hatch well as a rule.

Do not feed sulphur to young chicks. It is a curse to them.

Sulphate of iron in the drinking water makes a good tonic.

Do not blame the hens if they not lay, as it may be your fault.

If your hens are droopy, examine them ten chances to one they have lice.

The American Dominiques are a more hardy fowl than the Plymouth Rock.

Don't complain to us about over-fat hens as long as you continue that corn.

If you want to enjoy real solid fun throw several earth worms in the chick yard.

Endeavor to raise fine stock, not necessarily fancy birds, but good table and egg fowls.

Imperial Federation.

WILL present an opportunity to extend the fame of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry the unfailing remedy for cholera, cholera infantum, colic, cramps, diarrhœa, dysentery, and all summer complaints, to every part of the Empire. Wild Strawberry never fails.

John Burns makes out that the Southampton strikers have gained substantial advantages, and that they have done well to return to work.

White amber has been discovered on a 100 acre farm in Bedford, Ont., and the owner of the property has declined an offer of $10,000 for it. He demands double that sum.

SHELBURNE.

(From the Free Press.)

Mr. Hugh Falconer, of Shelburne, has been awarded three prizes for mastiffs at the Bench Show in Toronto this week.

Messrs. Hare & Irwin, of Violet Hill, have purchased the trotting stallion Gold Dust. The price paid, we are informed, was $1,000.

Mr. W. G. Reaburne, station agent at Hawkestone, formerly of Shelburne, was married on Wednesday of last week to Miss Williamson, of that village. Mr. and Mrs. Reaburne are on a trip down east.

The annual sports of the Ottawa Amateur Athletic Association came off in Ottawa on Saturday last. Mr. Hugh Carson, formerly of the Shelburne Lacrosse Club, won the prizes in the 100-yard, 220 yard and 440-yard foot races.

Miss Hester Jelly, daughter of Mr. Andrew Jelly, of Shelburne, was married on Wednesday of last week to Mr. Ed. Lewers, of North Augusta. Mr. and Mrs. Lewers arrived in Shelburne on Friday evening and will spend a few days with friends here before returning to their home down east.

Mr. Rich. Hewitt, of Hornings Mills, was doing some work for Mr. John Donkin, at Riverview, two weeks ago, and his horse was in the same stable as the stallion Man o' War. During the night the stallion got loose and attacked Hewitt's horse, tearing a fearful hole in the side of the animal's neck. It was the general opinion that the animal could not recover, but it was brought to Shelburne and left in charge of A. McTaggart, V. S., and the prospects are that it will recover. If it does, it will reflect credit on Mr. McTaggart as a veterinary surgeon.

Two young ladies from Coleridge were in Shelburne on Saturday evening last. On their way home they heard a wild cat in the woods west of Mr. Stephenson's farm. On Sunday morning early Mr. Stephenson was watering his horses and he saw the wild cat sitting on the ridge board of a barn on the Wilcox farm. He ran to Mr. Abernathy's to get him to keep the animal there until he could get a gun to shoot it. Mr. Abernathy was quite fearless and stood sentry until Mr. Stephenson arrived with Mr. W. J. Stone, who shot the animal on the roof. It turned out to be a racoon and not a wild cat.

FASHION NOTES.

There is a rage for the golden tints, both in evening dress and millinery.

Dove gray silk underwear is more fashionable even than silk suits in black.

Some new very fine French flannels, both plain and fancy, are exhibited, designed for princesse wrappers, easy gowns, and tennis suits. Some of these show fine Arabesques of rich coloring over neutral grounds.

Many surprisingly coarse materials, rough of service and suggestive of horse cloth, are employed with singularly genteel and distinguished effect, arising from the conviction that none but gentlewomen would dream of affecting them.

New French redingotes appear, designed for autumn teas and dinners, which have slightly open-throated corsages, lace fraises, and slight draperies on the hips. There are painted puffs on the shoulders of the close coat sleeves, folds of silk crossing the waist below the bust, and rich lace ruffles at the wrists.

A stylish tailor-gown of silver blue faced cloth has a riding habit effect in the back. The waistcoat and front of the dress are formed of pale tan colored camel's hair, with a deep embroidery in silver-blue silk as a border to each. The toque, shoes, and gloves match the waistcoat, an en suite is a long, very light boa of gray and brown natural ostrich feathers.

Gold lace is much used in delicate patterns with vandyked edges. And in Tosca nets with dots and crescents. There is much mixing of cream and gold, black and gold, and of white net with either gold or silver embroidery. Some very handsome and expensive Spanish embroideries in silk have their deeply pointed edges finished with heavy silk fringes.

Navy blue is a very fashionable color, and it will appear among many of the stylish street and carriage dresses during the present season. If anything could add to the prestige of serge—navy blue serge—it would be the fact that on Cup Day the Princess of Wales wore dark blue English cloth very delicately trimmed with superb lace like gold passement cris.

Habit-bodiced travelling-dresses of checked English cheviot in mixtures of chamois and vert de gris, princesse blue and "dust-miller" gray, cress green, doe color, etc., are made with sabran vest fronts of light kid, with jackets above which are extra long, and have wide pockets of the kid trimmed with large silver buttons, the edges finished with a line of silver cord. The collar and cuffs are likewise trimmed.

Most of the new serge gowns are made with plain skirts with one row of braid about the hem. Gold, silver, red, black, and white, which is the latest tint used, are all employed, and whatever the color it must be matched in the tint of the braiding on the vest or the shirt worn in its place. A striking serge of navy blue has a narrow rim of scarlet braid about its edge, a scarlet silk shirt, and a jaunty little jacket faced with the same silk, and with lapels buttoned back to show their brilliant lining in fair weather, but available in case of need for protection.

The new silks for dinner and evening toilets are magnificent in design and coloring. Flowers and sprays of the most delicious tints almost cover the exquisite grounds of rich brocades. Rich pekins (as striped silks are called in Paris) have broad ribbon stripes of velvet on a tinted satin ground, which is strewn with flowers. The colors are soft and delicate without being insipid. A pale mauve ground has cell blue bouquets embroidered in silver. Vert d'eau or willow-green is strewn with clusters of honeysuckle blossoms and tearose with their foliage. There are superb Watteau brocades which are made up in Louis XIV. fashion designed for receptions and bridesmaids' toilets.

SUNBEAMS.

The tobacco habit—a cigar wrapper.

Rural dissipation—a meadow fleck.

The city fire—dwelling in palaces and dyes.

Ran away with the coachman—the horses.

No wings are necessary to fly off the handle.

How to make money—learn the trade in a mint.

Cripples arrested for begging often make lame excuses.

How to win a beau—First catch your hair.

Time is like a woman, because time will tell.

Tramps never have to require their way. With them all roads lead to room.

The man who scoffs at the idea of purgatory may go further and fare worse.

No man is as good at home as his picture looks in his neighbor's album.

The first regular fall opening—that of the oyster.

Honest men take things as they come, while dishonest ones take them as they go.

After all, the real estate dealer's business is a hazardous one; he has lots at stake.

The fool is pleased with himself; the wise man dissatisfied. Score one for the fool.

Boy customer—"I want to look at some socks." Clerk—"Fast colors?" "No, blame it! I am a messenger boy."

"Jones, the coal merchant has sold out and gone to sea." "Is it possible? How he will cheat when he weighs the anchor!"

Maid—There is a ring at the telephone, Mistress—You go, Fanny; I cannot be spoken to while I am not dressed to receive company.

"Men make intoxicating drinks out of anything," said Mrs. Slowgo. "There is corn whiskey and rye, and they have even invented a cotton gin."

"She, who has promised to ask for no more jewelry this year—"I wish I were you for a little while." He—"Why, my dear?" She—"Because then I would buy my wife a pearl necklace."

"Then you have made up your mind, young lady, never to get married?" "Yes, sir. I'll die an old maid." "But if some young man were to propose to you?" "Ah, that would be a different thing altogether!"

The upright man does not cover as much ground as he might.

It's a wise man who recognizes when he's whipped.

It is an odd man who does not enjoy getting even.

It is easy for a deaf man to miss his calling.

A man will tell a lie to get sympathy, and a woman will tell a lie to give it.

Self made men are usually "fearfully and wonderfully made."

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not be an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sadbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pain in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the drowping into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

NASAL BALM

INSTANTLY RELIEVES.

Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallery, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cents for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

FULFORD & Co. Brockville, Ont.

T. D. D. Loyd, 6 Clarence street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the unequalled healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have persecuted myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I can not but feel to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM

POSITIVELY CURES

CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm is the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my own case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect relief of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, and a most pleasing relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

WOMEN AND HER.

The reason why a woman is afraid of a mouse is a profound mystery—indeed, it has never been very clearly proven that she is. But some women are constantly in such a nervous, irritable condition that the slightest thing annoys and startles them. The cause of this unfortunate state of affairs is usually some functional derangement; some distressing or painful irregularity, some derangement or peculiar weakness incident to her sex; or, it may be due to inflammation, ulceration or displacement, of some of the pelvic viscera, or to other organic lesions peculiar to her sex. From whatever cause it may arise, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive remedy, as certain in its curative results that its manufacturers sell it, through druggists, under a guarantee of its giving satisfaction in every case, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic diseases of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Poetry.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

I got to thinkin' of her—both parents dead and gone—
And all her sisters married off, and none but her and John
A-livin' all alone there in that lonesome sort of way,
And him a blamed old bachelor, wondernin'
ev'ry day!
I know'd 'em all from children, and their daddy from the time
He settled in the neighborhood, and hadn't ary a dime
But dollar, when he married, for to start house-
keepin' on:
So I got to thinkin' of her—both her parents dead and gone!

I got to thinkin' of her, and a-wondern' what she done
That all her sisters kep' a-gittin' married one by one,
And her without no chance—and the best girl of the pack—
An old maid, with her hands, you might say, tied behind her back!
And moreover, too, afore she died, she set to jer' take on,
When none of 'em was left, you know, but Evaline and John,
And jer' declare to goodness 'at the young men must be blind
To not see what a wife they'd git, if they got Evaline!

I got to thinkin' of her; in my great affliction
she
Was sich a comfort to me, and so kind and neighborly—
She'd come, and leave her housework, for to he'p out little Jane,
And talk of her own mother 'at she'd never see again—
May be sometimes cry together—though, for the most part, she
Would have the child so riconciled and happy like, 'at we Felt lonesomer'n ever when she'd put her bonnet on
And my she'd really half to be a-gittin' back to John!

I got to thinkin' of her, as I say—and more

I'd think of her dependance, and the burdens

Her parents both a-bein' dead, and all her

And married off, her a-livin' there alone

You might say jes' a-toilin' and a-slavin' out

For a man 'at hadn't pride enough to get

So I got to thinkin' of her—and it happened

CHAPTER LII.

AN INTERESTING DISCUSSION.

No one understood the rapt expression of Silvia's face as she listened to this discussion. No two people agreed over it. Some said the marriage was valid, others that it was not; some said the marriage laws were so insecure that the marriage was valid in Scotland but not in England. Though absurd, that seemed to be the general impression, while Silvia, with whitening lips, asked:

"Can it be possible that a marriage should be legal in one country and not in another?"

She was told "yes," that such a circumstance had often occurred, and would doubtless occur again.

"It seems horrible," she said. "I cannot understand such a terrible state of things."

She was talking to a gray headed English gentleman, one who had been in parliament for many years, and the shocked expression of her beautiful face interested him.

"It will not always be so," he said. "The attention of our legislators has been aroused—there must be a reform."

"There must be one!" cried Silvia, earnestly. "I always thought that marriage was a solemn ceremony, binding people together in the name of Heaven, without reference to human laws."

"That is what it ought to be," said the old statesman; "and what it will be when the attention of the whole Christian world is aroused to the correction of abuses."

"There can be no end to the confusion that such a state of things causes," said Silvia.

"It seems to me one inviolable rule," said the gentleman, "and I think to every sensible, reasonable mind it will seem just. When people believe themselves in all good faith to have been married, then the marriage is legal and binding. I believe that opinion is general."

A thousand eager questions rose to her lips, but she repressed them. I would not do to excite curiosity by her words or manner.

"I knew a very painful instance many years ago," continued the statesman, seeing that Silvia was deeply interested in the subject; "a gentleman—we will call him Mr. Devereux—fell deeply in love with a young girl, who was, however much below him in position. He took her to Scotland, went through the formula required by the Scottish marriage law, they lived as man and wife for three years. She had two sons. At the end of that time Mr. Devereux's fancy waned. He very coolly informed the young girl, who believed herself his wife, that the pretended marriage was no marriage at all; he settled a sum of money upon her and returned to England, and contracted an alliance with the daughter of a celebrated English peer."

"And she, the first wife?" asked Silvia, breathlessly.

"For some years she seemed quite unconscious of her claims, then she asserted them. It is impossible to say what the decision might have been, but the English wife died while the trial was pending, and the gentleman, making the best of matters, persuaded his first love to forgive him. She is known and received everywhere as the Countess A——, but between her husband and the relatives of the English lady he married there is a deadly feud that will one day or other lead to fatal consequences, I am afraid."

He did not know why the beautiful face looking into his had grown white with anguish.

"And you," she said; "you, yourself which of those two do you believe to be his lawful wife?"

"I, myself," he repeated, "I believe in the first marriage, of so true, it was in my opinion, a bona fide marriage. The girl herself believed it to be so, and in the sight of Heaven it was. But Mrs. Rymer, you are ill—you are faint here I am talking to you, and you are looking very ill. Let me take you where you can get some fresh air."

"No; I thank you," she replied. "I am sensitive, and your story shocked me."

He looked at the pure, delicate, lovely face, little dreaming how every word that he uttered was like a balm to her aching heart, because it held forth the hope that her son was not the child of shame.

"I think," he said, quietly, "that it is by a special providence gentle and sensitive women are spared any great knowledge of the world's horrors."

Then the statesman's attention was claimed elsewhere, and Silvia was left alone. Light, flowers, jewels, fair faces, all seemed to be whirling around. She was hardly conscious, for the sudden conviction had come to her that, if these marriages were legal, so was hers.

She had been married in perfect good faith; there had not been the faintest shadow of a doubt in her mind. She had been married according to the Scotch formula. Was it in the power of the man she accepted to be her husband, to set that marriage by a few words of his own?

It had not occurred to her before; she had most implicitly believed his decision, and had believed her marriage a pretense—a deception. If it were true—dear Heaven, if it were! if, instead of being that disgraced outcast she had learned to consider herself, she was indeed Alric Rymer's lawful wife, if her little son, instead of being nameless, had every claim upon his father; if this shame, this anguish, might pass away from her, if this bitter pain might no longer be hers!

The walls seemed to be closing round her. She was like a man who, after having been shut up in a dark dungeon for long, weary years, sees at length a gleam of sunlight. She saw this gleam, and it dazzled her; she longed to cry out, but her lips seemed to have grown white and stiff; her breath came in thick hot gasps. Could it be possible that after all he had deceived her—that she was his lawful wife, and he had deserted her?

There was a sudden sensation in that brilliant assembly; the beautiful English lady, whose sweet face had been the center of all attraction, had suddenly fainted, and had to be carried from the room.

Mrs. Greville ordered her carriage and drove home at once; but it was some time before Silvia recovered from the shock. When she did, Mrs. Greville stood by her side, with a smile, as usual, on her lips.

"Why, Silvia," she said, "you have been carrying on the arduous duties of chaperon now for some years, and never fell beneath the burden before; what was the matter to night?"

"I do not know, I cannot tell," she said, in a trembling tone.

Mrs. Greville bent lower down, so as to look more closely at her.

"There is something new and strange in your face to-night, Silvia. What is it?—a light that is half a shadow."

Silvia made no answer, and Mrs. Greville turned from her.

"Ah, you will not trust me; but I am not a bad reader of faces. I am quite sure that, in some way or other, you have had something to do with the world's great destroyer—love. Did you see Monsieur de Laune?"

"No, I did not see him. Oh, Mrs. Greville, pray do not mention his name to me again. You do not know."

"Of course I do not know; you make no attempt to tell me; how am I likely to know? If you have any secrets, Silvia, you will find me a safe confidante."

But Silvia turned away in something like despair. How little any one could ever guess what her secret was like.

Mrs. Greville was very kind to her, insisting that she needed rest. But to Silvia that rest was peopled by thoughts so distracting that it was worse than work.

CHAPTER LIII.

"HE WAS A VILLAIN!"

All other interests for Silvia Rymer now merged into one—was she, or was she not, the lawful wife of the man she had married according to the Scotch formula, and law? How anxiously she watched the progress of that long case could not be told in words. She read every line of it, never omitting one report, but it seemed to puzzle the wisest men. In Ireland it was tried, and there amid the ringing cheers of the people, clashing of bells, and public rejoicing of all kinds, the verdict was given for the lady—unhesitatingly given. She was—agreed judge, jury, and counsel—the lawful wife of the man she had married. There was no mistake about it, there could be no question over it. She was his lawful wife. That might have been considered decisive, but it was tried again in England, and there the decision was reversed. Silvia grew bewildered as she read. Was it possible that in a country priding itself on the justness of its laws, the integrity of its morals, such injustice could be?

The more deeply she thought upon the matter, the more decidedly she agreed with the old statesman that when people believed themselves to have been married, the marriage was binding, legal and valid. Yet the very doubt that assailed her seemed to her more terrible than all her former fears. She felt that she would give her life a hundred times over to know that the great weight of shame and reproach was hers no longer.

"I would die any death," she said to herself, "I would suffer any torture, to know that in the sight of Heaven I am his lawful wife."

She resolved, if she could meet the old statesman, Mr. Eversham, again, that she would give him the outline of her story, and ask his opinion of it. It would be a very easy, simple matter to bring the conversation round to the same subject, and then she would act by what he said. But fate, or fortune, seemed to be against her, they had met Mr. Eversham continually, but now that she wanted to see him, he had vanished from sight.

"Will you go to Madame Torlan's to-night, Silvia?" asked Mrs. Greville. "There will be a brilliant reception, the Neapolitan princess are to be there."

Silvia had not been well lately, and had not cared about going out. Suddenly her faced cleared and brightened.

"Will Mr. Eversham be there?" she asked.

Mrs. Greville laughed.

"Is he the attraction? Yes, I should think so; he would not miss if he is still in Rome. I have not seen him lately. Why, Silvia, what interests you in Mr. Eversham? He is old enough to be your grandfather."

"I like to talk to him; he is clever and well informed," she replied.

"Well, every one to his or her own peculiar taste. I am glad, in any case, that you are going; it will do you good, and you have not been looking like yourself lately, at all."

"I have not been well," said Silvia.

"Ah! there has been something more than that; but never mind, I am not endowed with woman's most fatal gift—curiosity. I am not going to tease you with questions. You have been anxious and unhappy; there has been a strong fever of restlessness upon you; if speaking to Mr. Eversham will benefit you, you shall talk to him."

Mrs. Greville seemed so pleased at the idea of going out again with Silvia that her companion was touched. They went to Mme. Tollan's, and one of the first people they met was Mr. Eversham, Mrs. Greville always ready to do a good natured action, spoke to him and kept him by her side. Suddenly affecting to see some one else she knew, she turned to him with that irresistible smile of hers.

"Mr. Eversham will you talk to Mrs. Rymer? I see an old friend in the saloon and I know she feels nervous in these crowded assemblies at being left alone."

Mr. Eversham's face brightened.

"You could not have conferred a greater favor upon me, madam," he said; and Mrs. Greville smiled as the old gentleman took his seat eagerly by the side of her beautiful companion.

But now the grand wish of her heart was accomplished, Silvia hesitated, hardly knowing how to begin the conversation. It was, however, Mr. Eversham who commenced by asking her if she still kept up her interest in the great Scotch marriage trial. She told him "yes," that she read every line of it, and agreed with the Irish jury, who had decided in the lady's favor.

"So do I," he replied emphatically. "If I had been on the English jury that verdict should never have been given. I would have held out against it."

Then Silvia took courage, and, raising her beautiful eyes to his, said:

"You seem to understand these matters, Mr. Eversham. I want to tell you something of a young friend of mine, if you will listen."

"Listen! Certainly I will. Do you think I could ask for anything more pleasant than to listen to you?"

Some women in her place would have made a desperate attempt—would have thrown off all gravity, and have told their story so as to arrest his attention.

Not so Silvia; she was too terribly in earnest. Her beautiful face grew quite white, her lips quivered, her eyes wore a piteous, pleading expression that would have melted the hardest heart. She was looking at him as though he held her fate in his hands.

"What of your friend?" he asked at length. And she started as one who wakes suddenly from a deep sleep.

"You must consider my story as quite confidential," she said; and he did not know how tightly her hands clasped the pretty fan she carried.

"I have been trusted with many secrets in my life," he said, gravely. "You may safely confide in me."

"My friend, years ago, was a simple, pretty, innocent, country girl, knowing nothing of the world or its ways; simple, good, because she knew no evil, but most certainly valuing her good name above everything.

"Perhaps she was not what the world calls a saint, yet, if the whole world had been offered to bribe her to do wrong, she would not have done it."

He nodded, as though he would say that he quite understood the character.

"To the village where she lived," continued Silvia, "there came a very handsome, clever, accomplished gentleman, who fell in love with her, and, after a time, asked her to be his wife. She consented."

The words began to fall slowly from her lips, and the clasp of her white fingers grew more tight.

"She, my friend, had a mother living, and there seemed to be no effort for, and no need of concealment, but at last the gentleman persuaded the young girl to elope with him, unknown to any one. I need not tell you what persuasions he used; they seemed good to her, and nothing doubting, she went with him. They traveled together to Scotland, and there they were married."

"In what manner?" he asked, looking much interested in her story.

"Before two witnesses; he took her hand and repeated the formula of words, declaring that in the presence of witnesses he made her his wife. She did the same; and they were known all over the neighborhood as man and wife. They one little boy, who was baptized by the minister of the parish in which they lived. I do not suppose that if any one had been told they were not man and wife such a thing would have been believed."

"Well?" said the old statesman, for she had paused, unable to continue.

"The young girl, my friend, believed in that marriage, as she believed in Heaven. I do not think anything in the wide world could have shaken her faith in it, until at last, suddenly, to her bewilderment, surprise, and anguish, he left her—he left her without one word, but he wrote to her and told her that the marriage was not legal; that he had never intended it to be legal; that he had provided amply for her and her little son."

"He was a villain!" said Mr. Eversham.

She raised a hand as though to ward off a blow.

"Oh! no—no!" she cried. "Do not say so."

Then recollecting herself suddenly, she grew still and calm.

"We do not know," she said. "We cannot tell how he was tempted. We may not know all the circumstances. There may be something that excuses him—"

"Nothing of the kind," he interrupted. "Women are so pitiful and merciful, they would excuse any crime. I tell you he was a villain! What happened then?"

"He went away, as I have said, leaving my friend and her little child. For some short time she, poor girl, was almost mad; indeed, I think her reason did leave her. It was the shame, when she had trusted and believed in him so implicitly."

"Poor child!" he murmured. "It was very hard for her."

"She would not take his money—she never touched it. She accepted the doom laid upon her. She learned to look upon herself as one branded by the world. She went away from the home where she had been so happy, a broken-hearted, despairing woman. She took nothing with her but her little child. She continued to live, always in sorrow, in shame, and in anguish; still, she lived. Her boy grew strong and beautiful—everything prospered with her—but she never met him again. What I wanted to ask you is—Do you think she was his lawful wife?"

ONE day's work for a healthy liver is to secrete three and a half pounds of bile. SUICIDE AT LINDSAY.

LINDSAY, Sept. 15.—John Milburn, contractor, aged 50, a highly respected citizen of the town of Lindsay, committed suicide at an early hour this morning. Mr. Milburn was several years ago prostrated with a very severe illness, confining him to bed for some time. He never fully recovered, suffering at times with weakness of the brain, and at 5.30 this morning, while temporarily insane, made a rush from his residence, situated near the river, for the rushing waters. His son noticing him running off followed, but could not overtake him before the unfortunate man made a plunge into eternity. The son made a strong effort to resuscitate him, but all in vain. The deceased leaves a wife and two sons.

ORANGEVILLE, OCT. 9, 1890.

CARDWELL COUNTY.

MR. ROBERT S. WHITE, member for Cardwell in the Commons, returned home on Wednesday. As our readers are aware Mr. White arrived here nearly two weeks ago for the purpose of holding a series of meetings in his county, which had been arranged for him by the President of the Conservative Association. He left Orangeville on the morning of Monday, Sept. 29th, and addressed a large gathering of electors at Palgrave the same evening, receiving a courteous and cordial reception. The following day a throat trouble, from which he had been suffering, became fully developed, causing intense pain and total loss of voice, compelling Mr. White to hasten back to Orangeville and place himself under the care of Dr. Henry. Of course the meetings announced for the last and present week had to be abandoned, to Mr. White's deep regret, and due notice of this fact was given. It will be several weeks before Mr. White can safely venture to use his voice in public meetings.

The visit to his constituents thus unfortunately interrupted, Mr. White has had in contemplation ever since his election, entertaining as he does, the opinion that the duty is imposed on every representative of the people of interchanging ideas with them from time to time, discussing questions of public interest and explaining the course of legislation and the reasons which have guided the votes of the member. It is Mr. White's hope to meet his constituents before the next session of Parliament, for the purpose of a free and frank interchange of opinion upon the questions which have agitated the public mind in the past, as well as those likely to attract attention in the near future.

STANDARD WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

Very few states of the American Union have the same standards for measuring grain and other farm produce. A former superintendent of the New York State census some time since published a curious table showing the number of pounds averdupois in a bushel of various commodities, as determined by custom and finally by Legislature, in different States and Territories in the Union. He found four different bushels of corn, four of rye, five of barley, seven of oats, and seven of buckwheat. These measures differed as widely that 1,000 Kansas bushels of barley, at 48 pounds to the bushel, would become 1,500 bushels in New Orleans, where 32 pounds answered to the same name, and 1,000 Kansas bushels of rye, at 56 pounds, would become 1,750 bushels in the same market. This superintendent entered upon this enquiry for the purpose of reducing farm statistics to a uniform standard. On comparing other units of measure as established by law, he found remarkable discrepancies in the measurement of stave, lumber, shingles and other forest products. It appeared, also, that a gallon of milk was 231 cubic inches in Vermont, and 282 cubic inches in the neighboring state of New Hampshire. The Vermont gallon was the English wine gallon, the New Hampshire measure was the ale or beer gallon. What has happened to the word bushel in America has happened over and over to all names of weights and measures since the world began. At first vaguely indicating uncertain quantities, they have hardened into more precise but different significations in different places.

An acre was a field (ager) meaning probably as much land as one plow would turn in a day, and it is perhaps creditable to the industry of the Scotch and Irish peasantry that the Scotch acre is a fourth and the Irish acre more than half larger than the English acre. A yard was the length of a man's girdle, an ell, of his arm, a fathom, the distance measured by his arms outstretched. An inch is merely a numeral, one twelfth (uncia), and an ounce is the same word brought across the channel by the Normans. The French divided the foot into thumbs (pouces), just as the charge in a gun is sometimes measured by fingers. Quart is another numeral, meaning a fourth of a gallon; and the gallon in France, where it originated, was a grocer's box, no more precise in its dimensions that a tea chest is now. A pound means simply a weight (pondus), and the stone was equally indefinite. In Great Britain the legal stone is now an eighth of a hundredweight (14 pounds), but other values remain in common use, as the stone of 25 pounds for wool, and the stone of 8 pounds for butchers meat. The weights and measures for the Dominion of Canada are uniform, as they apply to all the Provinces and Territories. For instance, the weight equivalent to a bushel of

| | Lbs. | | Lbs. |
|---|---|---|---|
| Wheat is | 60 | Indian corn | 56 |
| Rye | 56 | Peas | 60 |
| Barley | 48 | Oats | 34 |
| Beans | 60 | Clover seed | 60 |
| Timothy seed | 48 | Buckwheat | 48 |
| Flax seed | 50 | Hemp seed | 44 |
| Blue grass seed | 14 | Castor beans | 40 |

Potatoes, turnips, carrots, parsnips, beets and onions, 60 lbs. to the bushel, and bituminous coal, 70 lbs.; 480 grains, an ounce, Troy; 277 274 cubic inches to a gallon, or this gallon shall hold 10 lbs. weight of distilled water when it is at a temperature of 62 degrees, F. These are the only legal standards of weights and measures for the whole Dominion.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

PRESIDENT HARRISON signed the McKinley bill at four o'clock on Wednesday afternoon.

CANADIAN barley is to be shown at the great exhibition in London on the 20th to the 25th instant, where it will come into competition with barley grown in all counties of Europe.

BETWEEN injunctions and "boodle" tax collectors the town of Brampton must have experienced some exciting times lately. A short time ago several ratepayers secured an injunction restraining the council paying over part of a bonus to a manufacturing firm about to start there. The injunction was granted, but a few days afterwards was dissolved. Now the council has discovered that the tax collector is $1876 19 bonded. Great heads at Brampton, eh?

WHO SAILS YANKEE FISHERS?

(Toronto Telegram.)

The same kindly Providence that protects Canada against cyclones, floods and earthquakes, blesses it with bountiful harvests, and keeps all the fish within the three mile limit. The tendency of the finny tribes to stay near the shores of our country has impoverished the Yankee fishermen. Within the limits Canadians grow rich fishing, while outside the imaginary line the foreigners fish hard and catch nothing but freckles.

The Canadian skipper of the American smack Davy Crockett has fished all summer where the fish were. A privilege which the Washington government will not pay for was freely enjoyed by this and many other Yankee boats. Judged by the theories of American statesmen the privilege is worth nothing, but guaged by the practice of American fishermen it is very valuable. At all events the Crockett was enjoying a right reserved for Canadian vessels when it became the prize of a Canadian cruiser.

Its capture at this particular time is unfortunate. A just exercise of lawful authority can be twisted by American newspapers into a petty expression of anger at the McKinley bill. The nationality of the captain and crew of the Crockett may acquaint them with the truth that the American fisherman is a myth. The rant of papers and politicians about "the hardy Americans," the "nursery for the United States Navy," the "New England fishermen who quit their smacks to man our iron-clads in time of war" is silly. The "hardy American," the "sturdy new England fisherman" is ninety-nine times out of every hundred a Canadian, who handles a boat for Yankee capitalists, and in the event of war with Britain could not be paid to fight under Stars and Stripes.

CHARLESTON.

The genial proprietor of the Dwyer house did a rushing business during the fair. Mr. Dwyer is bound to keep up the reputation of his hostelry.

The Caledon fall fair was held here last Thursday and Friday. The weather was very unfavorable but despite this drawback the receipts amounted to $25 more than last year. The exhibits was about the same as previous years, but the attendance was slightly larger.

Mr. Hugh Henderson had the misfortune to meet with a very bad accident last Friday. Mr. Henderson, his wife and a lady friend were driving down the street and when in front of Dwyer's hotel he turned out to pass another team. The breeching strap broke and the horse ran away. All the occupants were thrown out. The ladies were not much hurt, but Mr. Henderson was very seriously injured. He was carried to Mr. Alexander Patterson's residence and Dr. McFadden summoned. The doctor said the unfortunate man was suffering from concussion of the brain. He has not sufficiently recovered to be removed to his home at Alton.

Jim Dick, the storekeeper, is the happy possessor of a hound that possesses more sense than the average man. The dog came from the neighborhood, but it does not put in all its time at Charleston. Once or twice a week the intelligent animal may be seen at the C. P. R. station just a little while before the up train arrives. When the train stops at the depot the dog jumps aboard the last car and remains there until the sonorous voice of the brakeman calls out "Alton," then the dog prepares to get off. He loots it over three or four lots to his old home, remains there until the following day and then walks back to Charleston. The noble little animal repeats this performance once or twice every week.

HOCKLEY.

Wet weather around here lately.

Nearly all the farmers in this vicinity have disposed of their barley.

A great many of the electors were very sorry to hear that Mr. R. S. White, our member, could not hold a meeting here on Saturday. We saw by THE SUN that he was sick at Orangeville.

A very pleasing event took place last week at the residence of Mr. James Stinson, near this place, being the marriage of that gentleman's second daughter, Minnie, to Mr. Jas. Parker. At 1 o'clock guests to about the number of one hundred assembled, after which all proceeded to St. John's church, where the ceremony was performed by the Rev. Mr. Watt, and "they twain became one flesh." After congratulations had been extended all returned to the residence of the bride's father, where an elaborate wedding dinner was in waiting, and we need not say was enjoyed by all. After dinner the usual amusements were indulged in until a late hour and many will recall the event and associate it with pleasant memories. The presents, we need hardly say, were both elegant and expensive, and showed clearly that the guests had done their duty in that respect. In conclusion we will extend our congratulations and wish Mr. and Mrs. Parker a long and prosperous married life.

The committee appointed at the public meeting last week to consider the advisability of forming a board of trade met last evening and decided to organize a board. Another public meeting will be held in the council chamber on Monday evening. A full attendance is requested.

OVERLOADING HORSES.—Some time ago the chief of police complained that Peter Johnston and W. Teeter loaded their horses heavier than the law allows. The men are employed in drawing stone from the Nottawa quarries to the C. P. R. station here. The cases came before Mayor Walsh on Saturday, but he dismissed both without costs.

SIX MONTHS TO THE CENTRAL.—Abner Wallace, who was arrested here a couple of weeks ago charged with stealing a watch from a Toronto man, was sentenced to six months in the central prison by Colonel Denison at Toronto on Monday. Abner explained that he bought the watch from a man at West Toronto Junction, but he could not explain satisfactorily how he came to have three.

FINED ON FRIDAY.—P. M. Pattullo dispensed law to Jack Smith and Eli Southorn, who were charged with creating a disturbance in the Elgin house last week. A fine of $2 and costs were imposed upon each of the accused. The magistrate also delivered judgment in the now celebrated Hannahson-Hubbard balloon and Armstrong-Leighton assault cases. The former case has been before the beak for the past three months. Hubbard was fined $1 and costs. In the latter case Leighton was taxed $1 and costs. Both these cases were fully reported in THE SUN when they occurred.

A REMINDER.—That thoughtful man who runs the Arthur Enterprise jogs the memory of his subscribers with the following pieces of prose, which will work around this part of the county as well as up at Arthur. The chilly autumn air recalls to mind somewhat vividly the fact that sundry persons have at divers times promised us wood on debts long past due. We would venture a suggestion to these dilatory but promising persons. There is no use in their hording up this fuel for future use, as we have it on good authority that if they persevere in their present course they will attain a position where fuel is a drug upon the market. Sell the wood and invest the proceeds in ice.

HIGH TAXES.—The rate of taxation in Elora has been fixed at 24 mills in the dollar, which is high, especially in view of the fact that property there is assessed up to its full selling value, and in view of the further fact that the amount levied for high and public school purposes in Elora is some one thousand dollars less than what is levied in Fergus. Where a rate of 26 mills is required, about the only thing that a council may properly do is to economize in every possible way and at every possible point. As a member of the Elora council one heard to remark on Monday evening, there is literally no opportunity for the exercise of progressive genius.—Fergus News-Record.—Not a small number of town ratepayers think Orangeville is assessed higher than any other place in northwestern Ontario, but, looking at the above, we find other places are as bad and a little worse off than we are.

ELECTRIC LIGHT.—Mr. D. McDonald of Orangeville, (a brother of our friend of the same name in Belwood), who has supplied the electric light in Orangeville since it was started there, two and a half years ago, being in Fergus on Tuesday, called at the News-Record office, and gave some fresh information on the electric light question. Up to the present he has been running on the "arc" system, and has used two machines of the same kind in the production of arc and incandescent lights. But now he is going to do away with one of these machines, and instead is putting in the alternating system of incandescent lighting, which is taking now, being the most economical. By it he will be able to supply 16 candle power incandescent lights in private houses at a charge of one cent per hour for each light, to be used only when desired, and the light to be measured out by the meter system something the same as gas. This will be exceedingly satisfactory to users, and will no doubt result in a greatly increased number using the electric light, as one strong objection to the old system was that people who took light privileges had to pay for the light on nights they did not use it just the same as on nights they did.—Fergus News-Record.

GOOD, SOUND ADVICE.—Just now the local newspapers throughout the country are giving weekly accounts of the greedy, green and weak-minded people being taken in and done by fakirs. We see by one paper that a fakir did the above class in a certain town not far from Harriston to the amount of $150. The next week another fakir struck the same place and collared $75 before being routed by the authorities. Now our annual fall show will be held on Oct 15 and 16 and no doubt we will have fakirs of all descriptions present, and we write this article solely for the purpose of putting our readers on their guard. No matter how simple the trick looks or how sure you are of winning don't do it or you will regret the act as soon as done. Of course, we cannot reach everybody with the newspaper. We have too many men who "could not afford to take one" but who through ignorance, lose hundreds of dollars every year—Erin Advocate. The above is good sound advice for the gullible agriculturists and others so inclined, but many think they know better and expect to beat the fakir at his own game. No amount of newspaper warning will convince some people that they know really less than they themselves imagine, and sore experience sometimes hardly bear the newspapers out in their unheeded warnings.

EX ALD. GALBRAITH HONORED.—On Saturday evening the residents of the east end sent an invitation to ex Ald. F. E. Galbraith to come to the Orient office to receive the congratulations of the citizens of that district on his return from abroad in the enjoyment of restored health. Last November Mr. Galbraith resigned his place in the council and has been travelling in Europe. His departure was so quickly decided upon that his friends and constituents had not time to give him a send off, although arrangements for it had been on foot. They then waited for his return, and their invitation of Saturday evening was a surprise to the recipient. When Mr. Galbraith got to the Orient office he found a large and representative gathering of men of St. Matthew's ward waiting for him. Ald. Leslie was moved to the chair and made a suitable speech, at the conclusion of which he produced a handsome sixteen-shooter Winchester rifle, which he presented to Mr. Galbraith. The present was appropriate, because Mr. Galbraith is about to start for Muskoka to join a hunting expedition. He mentioned this in his reply, and the residents of the ward of St. Matthew are expecting that big work will be done with the rifle in the next few weeks.—Empire. The subject of the above is an old Orangeville boy, and his friends here will be glad to learn of Frank's ever-increasing popularity. It must be remembered that Mr Galbraith commenced public life as drummer in the town band and later on was elected alderman for the East ward.

HON. J. M. GIBSON, Provincial Secretary, has issued a circular to the license inspectors of the Provinces, calling their attention to the necessity of vigilantly enforcing the provisions of the liquor law, and stating that the failure to enforce the Saturday night and Sunday clauses will be looked upon as demanding the retirement of the inspector, who is thus falling short of his duty. The inspectors are further advised to give peremptory notice to licensees that strict compliance with the law as to prohibited hours will be insisted on. Persistent law-breaking, the Provincial Secretary says, must be met by vigorous prosecution and assistance will always be offered, when needed, by the department. It is expected also that the inspector will spare no efforts in searching for and stamping out cases of unlicensed selling.

PUBLIC SCHOOL BOARD

THE OLD TEACHERS REENGAGED.

Social Scraps by the Trustees—Some Salaries Increased—Notions and Amendments to Order—Two Hours for Ten Minutes' Business.

If a person is in any way indisposed the best place he can go to get cured is to a meeting of the Orangeville public school board. The trustees are all good natured men, and they generally tell little interesting(?) tales between every item of business. Sometimes it happens the business plays out too soon, but the stale yarns are continually kept on the go and were never known to stagnate.

The meeting on Tuesday evening was no exception to the time-honored rule. The trustees could not find Chief Shields to open the council chamber, so they invaded Leighton's store and transacted the business in the rear of the shop. Seats were at a premium; some sat on benches, others on stools and the remainder on soap boxes. All the members of the board were present: Chairman Savage, Trustees Kelly, Hughes Wilcox, Dodds, Leighton, Ewings and Perdue. After every one got used to his seat the the minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted.

ACCOUNTS

from A. G. McKenny, $122.75 for the new bell, was ordered to be paid. A little talk was indulged in regarding the written guarantee received from the manufacturers warranting the bell not to crack in three years' time. Finally the account was ordered to be paid and the guarantee accepted. T. Stevenson's account of $1.80 was the cause of some little words between Trustees Kelly and Hughes. The chairman called "order" and the bill was ordered to be paid.

Principal Armstrong's report for September was read and confirmed. The total number on the roll is 546 with an attendance of 426.

APPLICATIONS

were received from all the old teachers asking to be reengaged. Some wanted a raise in their salary, while the others were content to jog along at the old pay. The following is a list of the teachers reengaged:

Principal Armstrong, salary $700, J. C. Reid, $475; R. J. Potter, $400; Miss M. Dolan, $300; Miss I. J. Beatty $300; Miss R. Ross, $300; Miss Vandusen, $300; Miss Martson, $275; Miss Smith, $300; Miss Ralph, $300. It will be noticed that Miss Vandusen's salary has been increased from $275 to $300, and Miss Dolan's from $285 to $300. Miss Stevens, whose certificate expires at Christmas, intends removing from town.

Two or three motions and a similar number of amendments were put to have a premium of $10 on the lowest room; or, in other words, give the teacher who taught the lowest room $310 per annum. Amendments carried.

Several complaints made against teachers by scholars' parents will be investigated by the Visiting committee.

Mr. Kelly moved a motion to the effect that teachers receive their salary monthly instead of quarterly. The motion was lost.

The board adjourned at 10 o'clock, after sitting two hours!

GRANDVALLEY.

(From the Star.)

The new bank was opened on Wednesday of last week.

A new temperance hotel is in full blast.

Mr. Andrew Collins, who was so seriously injured by falling from the C. P. R. bridge at Credit Forks, is so far improved as to be able to act as watchman at the company's bridge over the Grand River at Waldemar, one of the buttments having been found damaged by the June freshet.

On Saturday forenoon as Peter Black jr., of the 8th line of Amaranth, was starting to Orangeville with a load of hay he met with a bad mishap. In turning on to the road after passing through the gate from the lane the load upset and Mr. Clark lighted on his feet on a large stone, severely spraining both ankles. He was at once carried to the house and medical aid summoned and it will be some days before he is able to be around again.

SHELBURNE.

(From the Free Press.)

Water service has been put in for Fead & Co. and G. R. Hannah this week.

Mr. Alex. Cotton, of Belwood, left Shelburne on Tuesday morning with a drove of 400 sheep and lambs.

On Friday last Fleming Dack, a young boy, who lives with his brother-in-law, Mr. T. Kilborn, of Shelburne, received a serious kick in the face from a horse belonging to Mr. Kilborn which he was trying to catch, it having got out of the stable. A bad cut inflicted near the nose required three stitches, and the whole left side of his face is bruised. The boy is mending nicely, but a scar will likely remain.

On Tuesday as Messrs Chas. Worrid, Walt Wilson and Painter Wm. Collins were descending the big hill this side of Primrose Presbyterian church the hold-backs broke and the horse ran away. Mr. Worrid jumped and escaped, but the other two occupants of the rig were thrown out, Walt Wilson receiving a severe shaking up, while Mr. Collins got a bad cut on the head about 5 inches long.

The beautiful residence and grounds situated on 3rd avenue here, belonging to Thomas Wilkins, are being offered for sale cheap. Big bargain for some person. Apply at once to D. B. Brown, the money lender and estate agent.

Numerous cases of diptheria are reported at Buxton.

TOWN COUNCIL.

Some of the aldermen were a little dilatory about getting in the council chamber on Monday night. The 8 o'clock movement has again given place to the 7:30 arrangement of last year. By 8 o'clock, however, Mayor Walsh, Reeve Lindsay, Deputy-reeve Endacott, Ald. Youmans, Ketchum, Green, Coleman King, Gillespie, Bailey and Pinkney were patiently awaiting the arrival of the clerk. After the latter arrived the mayor read from J. Graham, $26.25; Inspector Lyons, $3.25; Geo. Gray, 98½ cents; ordered to be paid; THE SUN, $9.25; Post, $3.25; referred to Printing committee.

ACCOUNTS

COMMUNICATIONS.

From W. McKim, saying that the town had no claim against him for back taxes. Referred to Assessment committee.

Thomas Hewitt informed the council that he did not owe $12.50 in back taxes. The Assessment committee will investigate the matter.

P. Mooney, re an overcharge of $10 in taxes. Referred to Assessment committee.

THE OLD RACE.

E. & D. Moody and T. C. Emery communicated the fact that the culvert, where the waterworks race crosses Zina street is too low and the water floods the street. The R. & B. committee will investigate the matter.

Myers & Robb, acting for C. H. King, intimated that if $35 damages was paid to Mr. King he would not commence an action in regard to the south Broadway sewer which empties into Mr. King's mill race. Mr. King was not present so no action was taken.

C.P.R. Station Agent Browne informed the council that the electric light at the foot of Mill street did not throw sufficient light on the railway crossing to ensure public safety, and asked that a light be placed nearer the track. Referred to Street Lighting committee.

EARLY CLOSING BYLAW.

A petition signed by all the storekeepers but one requesting the council to pass a bylaw compelling the closing of stores at 6 o'clock each evening, Wednesdays and Saturdays excepted. A similar bylaw has been in force for three years, but it was discovered illegal. A new bylaw will be introduced.

REPORTS.

Ald. Gillespie read the F & W. report, which said the affairs in connection with the waterworks were in good condition; and recommended the payment of several accounts. Adopted.

The Street Lighting committee's report was read by Ald. Ketchum, which recommended the payment of D. McDonald's account.

Ald. Bailey read the R. & B. report. This report was the cause of some very heated arguments between Mr. B. and the reeve. The latter thought he should remit the report. It was adopted on the understanding that Mr. B. would bring in a detailed report at the next meeting. The report said that $2,300 had been spent by the R. & B. this year.

A bylaw was introduced by the reeve to reduce the number at present required for the R. & B. Committee, and it received its first and second reading.

THE WOOD BYLAW.

Ald. Ketchum introduced a bylaw to amend the wood bylaw of last year, which was read a first and second time. The amendment provided that the constable should measure every load of wood that came to the market and mark the amount contained on the load. Objections were raised against the constable being compelled to stand at the market, the council thought that he had enough business to attend to at present. In the meantime they are trying to get the weighmaster to officiate.

NOTES.

The clerk was instructed to correspond with the Mono council asking the latter to repair a bridge at the Forest Lawn cemetery.

Ald. Ketchum requested the use of the council chamber for board of trade meetings. Granted.

Reeve Lindsay moved that the R. & B. committee be not allowed to spend any more money without the consent of the council. Carried.

We have many times been called upon to acknowledge the receipt of various presents the majority of them taking the form of something good to eat, but probably the most peculiar that have ever reached us were sent by Mr. W. A. Hathaway, of Wentworth Co., being a live turtle and portions of the anatomy of a dead Indian. The former we might eat, but the latter are valuable only as relics. Indian remains and implements of war are constantly being turned up by ploughmen in the vicinity from which these came, enough having been gathered by one odd genius to build a fence around his garden. The spot is supposed to have been the scene of a great battle between hostile tribes in the dim and distant past. Arthur Enterprise.

On Friday morning, says the Toronto World, Mr. A. B. Aylesworth, Q. C. obtained from Chief Justice Galt an order discharging one John Boyle from custody. Boyle was arrested at Sarnia in August last for "exhibiting himself in a state of drunkenness on the public streets contrary to statute." On the evidence of one witness, who swore that when out driving he saw Boyle "on the street staggering—he couldn't walk straight," he was convicted and sentenced to pay $50 and costs or to 6 months' imprisonment and hard labor. A writ of habeas corpus was obtained and on its return an order was made discharging the prisoner. His Lordship criticised in a most severe manner the action of the Mayor of Sarnia, who was the convicting magistrate in this case, saying that the errors made by those who pretend to administer summary justice is oftimes more criminal than the offences committed by the accused.

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

(Auction Speed by the Press—Gaelic Fundy—Our Own Special—A Southern Crime—Other Cable News.)

SANDUSKY, OCT. 7.—Adults and strangers are dying of cholera by scores along the East Side canal. Many of them attacked die within an hour in horrible agony. The inhabitants are afraid to touch the bodies and birds and beasts are feasting on them.

A Secondarily Sensitive.

VIENNA, Oct. 7.—A section named Ledorer who was employed in the kitchen of Archduke Sigismund at Gmunnd, in Styria, has been arrested on the charge of putting arsenic in the food prepared for the tables of the Archduke. The Archduke and his suite partook of the food and all were taken sick a short time afterward. Medical aid was hastily summoned and the doctors arrived in time to neutralize the effects of the poison. Ledorer's sole object was to effect the dismissal of the Archduke's chef, who had incurred his enmity.

THE GLADSTONIAN KITE.

Hon. Herbert Flies It for the Benefit of His Pops.

(Blennard Talma.)

LONDON, Oct. 7.—Herbert Gladstone's speech at Bangor is another kite from Hawarden. The Grand Old Man knows that the working classes are growing more and more indifferent to his Irish policy, and he is going to take up in a general abstract way reforms in which he thinks the working classes are specially interested. Herbert has been more than once sent out to fly the paternal kite. Some months before the momentous conversion of his father to Home Rule his son began to speak and argue in favor of making terms with Parnell. His speech at Bangor means that Gladstone is going to seek the working class vote by loud professions of interest in the masses, and by a large and shadowy scheme conceived in their supposed interest.

THE NATIONALISTS AND THE HAT.

Speeches by McCarthy, Dillon and Redmond at the Convention.

DUBLIN, Oct. 7.—Sixty-four members attended the National Convention yesterday at the Mansion House. The convention sat in private for an hour and a half and adjourned to the City Hall.

Mr. McCarthy in a speech referred to the trial in Tipperary as grotesque. Mr. Parnell, he said, though absent, was in active co-operation with what they did. He studied and mastered all the resolutions.

The party, he said, had faith in the unconquerable Irish people, whom agents of despotic power had not subdued, and they were not likely to be greatly intimidated by the sham Convention of the present day. They had faith in Irishmen abroad and in the great liberal democracy of England. They had faith in their leaders—Parnell, Gladstone and Morley—and the prospect always was full of growing light. (Loud cheers.) Mr. O'Connor invighed against the "Unionist syndicate" working against the Peasantry and other tenants and conspiracy extending from the First Lord of the Treasury to the miserable loafer who does the actual work.

Mr. Redmond said if Irishmen did their duty to themselves, and the Parnellites were able, as he believed they would be, to force the Government to do a small part of their duty, it would be possible to tide over the coming distress without the humiliation and shame of again appealing to the charity of the world.

There was a large crowd outside the hall. The trial at Tipperary having been adjourned until Friday, Dillon, O'Brien, Sheehy, Harrison and Condon returned to Dublin last night. They were met at the station and escorted to Dillon's residence, where Dillon made a brief address. He said he and his associates would be no parties to parading the Irish people before the world as a nation of beggars. The people ought not to be driven to beg when there was food enough in the country.

The Woman's Liberal Association of Bradford, England, has given £50 to the National League. Thomas P. Gill, a member of the Irish solution to America, has sailed for the United States.

A Great Change in Scotland.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—While passing through Inverness the other Sunday, the Postmaster-General took the opportunity of paying a visit to the new postoffice, which was opened recently for public business. It is a curious instance of the change that has come over the Scotch feeling on such things, that the act of Sabbath desecration, which 15 years ago would have produced a howl of displeasure from end to end of the country, should have been passed over quite unnoticed by the papers and preachers.

Monument to Martyrs.

PESTH, Oct. 7.—A monument was unveiled yesterday at Arad to the 13 martyrs of the Hungarian revolution of 1849. The whole nation subscribed to the monument. At the unveiling a speech by Kossuth was reproduced by phonograph.

Dynamiters to be Let Go.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—The Government has decided, under certain conditions, to release a number of the unfortunate men now serving life sentences in British prisons for complicity in the earlier dynamite outrages. Recent investigations have proved beyond doubt that many of these men—probably the majority—were the victims of agents' provocateurs. This discovery, coupled with the fact that no blood was shed by the prisoners and that they have already undergone heavy punishment in convict prisons, has induced the Government to recommend to the crown to give merciful reconsideration to their cases.

"Jack the Ripper's" Threat.

LONDON, Oct. 7.—The new threat of "Jack the Ripper" has once more produced a marked feeling of dread throughout the city. Last night the whole of the Whitechapel district was patrolled by hundreds of constables in plain clothes, and at the corner of every street one was on the watch. The police authorities believe that "Jack" is still living in the neighborhood, and it is feared that his mania is on the point of breaking out again.

After Russian Seals.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Oct. 7.—A number of Americans at Yokohama and other Japanese ports are fitting out vessels to go sealhunting under the British, German and Japanese flags. Next year the Russian Government proposes to protect the rookeries. Five Russian war vessels are now cruising in Behring Sea with instructions to seize any vessel found sealing within the prescribed shore limit, which is five miles. It is stated that vessels which recently started on sealing cruises will not cruise in the Behring Sea proper. They will station themselves at a narrow pass called Unimak, through which seals pass on the way to the rookeries, and then slaughter them by wholesale.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Gout, Wounds, Ulcerations, and other diseases affecting the skin, are capable of speedy amendment by this cooling and healing ointment, which has called forth the hundred pounds from people who had suffered for years from bad legs, ulcers. Many of those who have experienced the soothing effect of it can form an idea of the comfort it bestows by merely mentioning sleepless and sleeping pain. Wherever Holloway's Ointment has been once used it has established its own worth, and mothers seek it as the safest remedy for all such complaints in neuralgia, rheumatism and gout, this application, properly used, gives wonderful relief.

'TWAS CLEVERLY DONE.

A Horse Thief with His Hundreds and Robs His Captor.

PORT HOPE, Sept. 30.—In October last a young man named Fred Hardy stole a horse, buggy, harness and robes from a livery stable man named Michael Doe, in the village of New Hampshire, Ford County, to the west of Canada and quartered for a time with Mr. Elisha, Dorlan, Port Hope, who also of the whereabouts of the stolen property papers to capture his man. Yesterday he found out where Hardy was, and after consulting a legal gentleman had a warrant to take him to the Dominion. At Mr. W. J. Byers, lot 12, 8th con. Hope, he found Hardy, who consented to go back to the States with him. The darkies were up on, taking himself to Mr. Doe, when they adjourned to Noble Brown's tavern to stay all night, intending to come to town quietly the morning and take the Norwegian for Rochester. They both retired to rest, but some time during the night Hardy got the bracelet on his captor's wrist, taking the key with him. He went through the pocket of Doe, taking $50 and his new hat, leaving only $1.25 for the American gentleman with which to pay his way home.

PROPOSED ON THE FIRST VISIT.

A Precipitate Wooer of Thurlow Has to Pay $500 Damages.

BELLEVILLE, Sept. 30.—The first case tried at the Assizes was a branch of promise action, in which Miss Shaw of Thurlow sued George W. Hall of the same township for damages for breach of promise. Plaintiff is a spinster of 39 years and defendant is a widower of about the same age. Plaintiff swore that the proposal was made at the first visit and that defendant had visited her four times. Defendant denied the promise, whilst three witnesses swore that her reputation was not good and two that they would not believe her under oath. The jury gave plaintiff a verdict for $500. William Arnot was to-day placed on trial charged with manslaughter in killing Hannah Crie on Feb. 14 last by a blow of his fist or causing her death from exposure.

THE NATIONALIST TRIALS.

The New York Sun's Appeal to the People of America.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—The Sun to-morrow will publish an appeal to the people of America from the American committee for the relief of famine sufferers in Irelnd. The most trustworthy information is that the complete failure of the potato crop makes another great famine in Ireland practically inevitable. The committee appeals for immediate contributions of money, provisions and clothing. The committee includes the chairman, General James Grant Wilson; honorary chairman, Rutherford B. Hayes; Grover Cleveland; treasurer, The New York Sun.

IRELAND'S GREAT FAMINE.

Startling Extracts from the Speeches of the Accused Men.

DUBLIN, Sept. 30.—In an application today made before Judge Holmes of the High Court for a writ to prohibit the Tipperary magistrates from proceeding with the hearing in the case of the Nationalists on the ground of bias against the accused, Timothy Healy made an elaborate argument in favor of the writ. Judge Holmes postponed his decision on the application.

At Tipperary the reading of extracts from speeches of the defendants was continued to prove that tenants were invited by them not to pay rent.

An Important Excommunication.

ROME, Sept. 30.—A sensation has been caused by the action of the Vatican authorities in excommunicating the theological faculty of the University of Coimbra, Portugal, and prohibiting a new ordination of priests in 1890. It is feared serious consequences will ensue, owing to the critical political state of Portugal. The Vatican is blamed generally on the ground that it has acted rashly.

John Morley at Hawarden.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—John Morley has arrived at Hawarden, where he will remain two days conferring with Mr. Gladstone.

A Railway From Bangkok to Korat.

RANGOON, Sept. 30.—Owing to the influence of the German consul here a German engineer named Bestige has been entrusted with the construction of a railway from Bangkok to Korat, a distance of 105 miles. ### German Socialists Rejoice.

BERLIN, Sept. 30.—There were great rejoicings among the Socialists in Germany today over the expiration of the anti-Socialist law. There were no disturbances.

Lived 27 Days on Water.

KINGSTON, Sept. 30.—A woman 70 years of age, named Morris, has completed the remarkable feat of fasting for 27 days. Her only nourishment was a few spoonfuls of water a day. After the respite she took a longing for hard boiled eggs, and on them she is now maintaining life. She is very feeble.

Sir Tenage and Lady O'Brien of Newfoundland were in the city yesterday, and inspected the Royal Military College.

The Holton Murder Recalled.

WINNIPEG, Sept. 30.—Todd Quick, charged with stealing cattle from Colchester farmers, has been committed to stand his trial at the Fall Assizes. Quick, it will be remembered, was charged with the Holton, Tilbury Centre, murder and was set free through a disagreement of the jury.

To Redeem Nine African Girls.

CHICAGO, Sept. 30.—A great ovation was tendered to Bishop Taylor of Africa by the Rock River Methodist Conference. In his address the Bishop sketched the outlines of his great work, and said that thirty-five mission stations are prospering on the Congo. He said that they could easily get boys to enter the mission schools, but that purchasers bought up the little girls, and they could not be recovered without the payment of a ransom. This produced a sensation. Near the close a brother asked the missionary how much it took to redeem a girl. The Bishop answered, "About $20." Money was at once raised for the redemption of nine girls.

Killed While Looking from His Cab Window.

BUFFALO, Sept. 30.—Engineer John Scanlon of Lehigh Valley engine 495 was killed last evening. While backing his engine down Hamburg-street he looked out of the cab window at some articles on the track, and his head was caught between a coal trestle and the cab and crushed to a jelly. Deceased was 35 years old.

OLD MADGE AMONG THE BEES.

What bliss complete life holds for her!
If heaven hath degrees
Then here may be where drowsily
She purrs among the bees—
There, on the sun-striped window sill,
Where bloom a mahogany bee;
Where bees oft come and their low hum
Doth mingle with her purr.

Never a thought of care hath Madge
From dawn till eve hath come;
Only to sit on the sill, where fit
The bees among the bloom!
Perhaps she dreams that she, like them,
Doth gather honey too,
As we, sometime, may dream we rhyme
As well as others do?

Her eyes have dimmer grown of late;
Nor shine they as of old,
When their green tint would glow and glint
And often change to gold.
Our Madge, alas, is growing old!
But what cares she for this?
Without a soul, without a goal,
She still purs on in bliss,

And watches bees that flitteth there,
As once she watched a bird—
When she was aly and young and spry,
Nor to the window purred.
Now, bee's hum is as sweet to her
As bird-song long ago
All life is sweet and all complete
If we but think it so.

AS YOU GO THROUGH LIFE.

Don't look for the flaws as you go through life;
And even when you find them,
It is wise and kind to be somewhat blind
And look for the virtue behind them.
For the cloudiest night has a hint of light
Somewhere in its shadows hiding;
It is better by far to hunt for a star,
Than the spots on the sun abiding.

The current of life runs every way
To the bosom of God's great ocean.
Don't set your force against the river's course
And think to alter its motion.
Don't waste a curse on the universe—
Remember it lived before you
Don't butt at the storm with your puny form—
But bend and let it go o'er you

The world will never adjust itself
To suit your whims to the letter.
Some things must go wrong your whole life long,
And the sooner you know it the better.
It is folly to fight with the infinite,
And go under at last in the wrestle,
Then wiser man, shapes into God's plan
As the water shapes into a vessel.

Men who have horse sense know when to say neigh.

William the Conqueror couldn't write his name, but he made his mark just the same.

Turn your back on borrowed trouble, and you will be better prepared to face the real.

She—What's a poacher, Jack? He—A fellow who steals the game. She—Why, you told me that was an umpire.

It is said that money can never give happiness. This is an experiment, however, that every man wishes to try for himself.

"Did she give you anything, Bill?" asked Bill's fellow-tramp. "Yes; she gave me the cold shoulder, with plenty of sauce."

A visit to a cemetery is calculated to impress a man that it is a great pity he can't have his epitaph written on his birthday instead of so much later.

"Ye—s, he's honest 'nuff," said a Sixth street colored man, who was questioned as to a neighbor; "but things is privater around him when dey's locked up."

Customer—"Waiter, there's brown soap on this fork." Julius Caesar—"Sure 'nuff, sir. I told the girl she was washing the table-ware too much al together."

First Boarder—Are you sure this is your flute? Second Boarder—Why, of course. Don't I play on it every night? First Boarder—That was why I asked. You seem to be so imperfectly acquainted with it.

With the candidate and his constituent before election it is always a special and hearty hand shake. And after the election it is a common and regular shake.

"My queen!" said he to his wife an ex typewriter.

"My dictator!" she whispered, as she nestled closer to his manly bosom.

Grocer—What's that about the dozen eggs you bought this morning?

Brown—They were all bad except one, and I've called to see how much extra I owe you for the good one.

Measuring by the Eye.—Young Lady—"I want a pair of shoes, large and comfortable. Two will do." New Boy (glancing at her footy—"Mr. Leather, the lady wants two shoes, large and comfortable. Where's that box of sizes?"

A Comfort.—"What is the matter, dear boy? You are hardly a year married, and look so troubled?" "I had no idea, I must confess, that a wife was going to be so costly a thing." "Well, that is not so much you know, considering how long she lasts."

Bustle in a store.—Mrs. Hayseed (on her first visit to town)—"One would think that big store I was just in would do considerable business, but I suppose most of the crowd just looks around and goes out again. My! Wasn't there a commotion when I bought something and paid for it." Hostess—"A commotion?" Mrs. Hayseed—Mercy! yes. Jest as quick as that clerk-girl got my money, she began yelling 'Cash' like mad—and half a dozen little errand boys came rushin' up to see it."

THE CONFERENCE BILL PASSED.

The End of a Long and Tedious Session of Congress.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 30.—Throughout the afternoon there was a large and fashionable attendance of an early session of Congress. Members congregated in the lobbies, some of the speaker's desk and earnestly sought for "recognition," hoping to have "pleasant words" had for the most part only private halls to be considered.

At 6.30 p.m. the conference report on the Tariff Bill was adopted by the Senate by a vote of 33 to 27, Senator Plumb, Peddock and Pettigrew (Rep.) Minnesota voting in the negative.

The conference report on the tariff bill was taken up in the Senate. Mr. Carlisle said it would be impossible to state the effect of the measure on the public revenue with any accuracy, but he could state approximately what the effect on taxation would be. The Finance Committee had stated that the reduction of revenue was $60,000,000 under the Republican bill. Of this reduction from articles placed on the free list nearly $50,000,000 came from sugar and molasses, leaving only between four and five millions as the reductions occasioned by the removal of other articles from the dutiable list. He asserted the bill, as it now stood excepting sugar and molasses, removed from the free list and placed on the dutiable list more than it took from the dutiable list and placed on the free list. He also asserted that the bill would reduce the revenues and increase the taxation of the people very many times the amount by increasing the prices of articles of similar domestic production. If it were true that the revenue under the conference bill on the basis of importations of 1889 would be over $225,000,000 then the average rate of duty on dutiable articles would be 37 7-10 per cent. Without taking into account the effect of the ninth section of the administrative bill on dutiable articles, it would be 6½ per cent. instead of 40½ per cent. under existing law.

Mr. Carlisle then quoted from writers on jurisprudence and from decisions of courts in several states to the effect that taxation for private purposes was not taxation but plunder. He said the bill permitted the President to impose higher duty on sugar unless the governments of sugar-producing countries should do something that would be satisfactory to His Excellency." It was a proposition to confide to the judgment or caprice of the President alone the determination not merely of certain facts defined in the law but of the results and effects of these facts and circumstances. The amendment offered by Senator Hale had been substantially correct, but the amendment reported from the Finance Committee and embodied in the bill was not reciprocity—it was retaliation pure and simple. Coffee, tea and hides had been on the free list for many years and had not put them for the benefit of the people of the United States and not as an act of favoritism to any foreign country. Sugar and molasses had been put on the free list in the pending bill on the ground that it would be for the benefit of the people of the United States. The proposition was one to retaliate on the people of the United States by imposing a duty of 1½ cents a pound on tea, 3 cents a pound on coffee and from 25 to 50 per cent. on sugar unless China, Japan, Brazil and Spain should do certain things.

Dr. Carlisle referred to the inconsistency of putting sugar on the free list, because the United States did not produce a large proportion of the amount consumed, and putting a big tax on it in violation of the United States did not produce any of it. He also ridiculed the pretension of opening the South American markets to the agricultural products of the United States. There was no market therefor our agricultural products. The pretence that this would benefit the farmers was a false pretence. It could only benefit producers of such manufactured articles as the people of South America wanted. He did not think any Senator on the Republican side seriously contended that this reciprocity clause ever could be executed. However, reciprocity with South America would be of no substantial benefit to our manufacturers unless combined with a stipulation that like privileges are not to be granted to any other country, because if other countries can send in manufactured goods on the same terms that ours are admitted we will stand in the markets of South America precisely as we stand now, unable to compete with Germany, France or England. The reciprocity contemplated was not of this sort. He regarded the proposition as a mere political device to put off for the time being a rising cloud of opposition to this extreme policy of protection.

Some of his statements were challenged by Mr Allison. Mr. Allison also criticised several of Mr. Carlisle's statements and denied their accuracy. He believed the conference bill would reduce revenues between forty and forty-five million dollars. He thought that within five years the United States would produce substantially all the tin plate consumed here, and consumers would have it cheaper. He believed it was, on the whole, a fair bill to every section of the country as a protective measure. He still thought many of the duties were too high. The bill would now go to the country as a new statement of many features, especially as a concession to the sugar country. He hoped the bill would have a fair test, and if it proved beneficial, as he believed it would, it would settle the tariff for many years to come.

Mr Aldrich closed the discussion. He congratulated the Senate and the country upon the long-protracted crisis of the long and wearisome struggle over the tariff bill. The discussion had been unusually prolonged because it was the first time that a tariff bill had been discussed in all its items in either House. The first Congress that met after the signing of the constitution had imposed tariff duties and provided bounties. The increases of duty made in the bill were of four classes. The first might be described as a correction of errors and irregularities. To this class belonged tin plate and cotton ties, whereby erroneous construction of law or by bad legislation the duty on one article had been made lower than on corresponding or similar articles. Another class consisted of articles which it had not been supposed when the law of 1883 was passed could be made in the United States, and on which protective duties had not been levied. It included all the finer manufactures in the cotton, flax and linen and the iron and steel schedules. The third class consisted of articles on which small specific rates had been levied. They were demanded by great consequence. The fourth class comprised agricultural products. The duties on that class had been largely increased, for instance on wool. The farmers of the country believed the large importations were injuring that great industry.

THE THREE-MILE LIMIT.

OLD THE CROCKETT VIOLATED THE TREATY OF 1818.

Condition Of Affairs—The Supreme Court to Determine the Question—Other Seizures.

GRANDTOWN, P.E.I., Sept. 28.—The American fishing schooner Percy Crockett, seized at Souris last week, was brought to Charlottown this morning by Captain Gordon of the Government cruiser Acadia. Shortly after her arrival Marshal Richards of the Vice-Admiralty Court went on board and formally arrested the vessel under a warrant which had been taken out by Edward J. Hodgson, the agent of the Department of Justice for the island. The schooner was shortly afterward docked at Peake's wharf and the mate were housed. A reporter visited her after she came to the wharf and read the warrant and summons which the marshal had nailed to the mainmast. It was learned that the crown claimed the condemnation of the vessel, her tackle, apparel and furniture, fishing gear, cargo, seines and boats for violation of the treaty of 1818 and of the Imperial statute 59, George the Third, chap. 38, and also of the Canadian statutes, chap. 94, respecting fishing by foreign vessels. It is difficult to obtain definite information regarding the evidence upon which the vessel was seized.

The captain and crew of the Davy Crockett state that information was given by two seamen who deserted in August last. This may or may not be true, but it is certain that Captain Gordon did not act on their information but other evidence which leaves but little doubt as to the guilt of the schooner, although the charge as specified appears in the papers in the Vice-Admiralty Court.

It is generally known that the offence charged is for fishing off the port of Malpeq P.E.I., within the three mile limit; also for landing pogey bait at the same place.

The crew still remain on board, and no doubt will until after the arrival of the managing owner, who is expected here this week, when the vessel will likely be hauled up for the hearing. The Crockett is a well-built schooner, 80 tons measurement. She is 90 feet long, 22 feet wide and 8 feet deep. She was built in Bath, Me., in 1876, and is owned by David Tarr, James G. Tarr, D. S. Tarr and B. N. Tarr of Gloucester, Mass.

SEVERAL RAILROAD SMASH-UPS.

Costly Collision on the M.C.R.—Sixteen Carloads of Freight Buried.

DUTTON, Sept. 30.—Consequent upon the first section of "C" freight on the M.C.R. breaking in two 3 miles west of here yesterday, the second section crashed into the hind end of the foremost train. The caboose was knocked into splinters. Nine cars were derailed. The wreck caught fire from the caboose, six cars and their contents being burned. The engine, No. 408, plunged into the ditch, burying itself half its length in the ground. Two cars were laden with boots and shoes, two with cotton, one with household furniture, one with china, and one with cutlery. Nearly everything was destroyed. The track was torn up for about twelve rods. The trainmen escaped unhurt, by jumping.

Wreck on the Intercolonial.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Sept. 30.—A serious accident occurred on the Intercolonial Railway last night. The fast express from Halifax for Montreal, in charge of Conductor Gunn and Driver Carr, left Moncton 23 minutes late. In order to make the time up speed was made up to 40 miles per hour. After leaving Petit Codiac, near Anagance, a pile of sleepers thrown across the track was encountered. The train struck the obstruction and the locomotive was derailed and made a complete wreck, but the engineer and fireman were unhurt. There were a large number of passengers on board but all escaped unharmed.

The Operator Arrested.

CANTON, Pa., Sept. 30.—Frank Glosser, day operator at Leighton, was arrested today on the charge of having caused by his negligence the wreck on the Jersey Central railroad last night by which three men lost their lives.

TWO MINISTERS ELECTED.

The Minister of Agriculture and the Provincial Treasurer Elected by Acclamation.

WHITBY, Sept. 30.—Hon. John Dryden, farmer-general for Ontario, was resected by acclamation in South Ontario to-day. Besides Mr Dryden there were nominated but withdrew: Messrs. Robert Miller, Dryden's opponent in the general election, F. Howard Annes, Dr. R. J. Gunn and ex Mayor Long.

WELLAND, Sept. 30.—A large gathering of the electors of Monk took place to-day at Wellandport to nominate and congratulate Mr Harcourt upon his recent appointment to the treasurership of Ontario. As there were no opposition candidates the meeting was smooth and pleasant. The prominent men of the county congratulated Mr. Harcourt upon his appointment, also Mr. Mowat and Ontario upon having him in their cabinet. The Conservatives had decided to not oppose Mr Harcourt's re-election.

PROLONGING THE STRIKES.

The Scotch Iron Masters Will Not Come to Terms.

LONDON, Sept. 30.—The Scotch iron masters have definitely refused to accede to the terms demanded by their men. The Cumberland iron workers, who are now on strike in Scotland offer aid to the Scotch iron workers on condition that the latter insist upon eight hour shifts. The abandonment of all hope of a settlement of the trouble has stiffened the pig iron market at Glasgow.

Cracksmen Strike Norwich.

NORWICH, Sept. 30.—Burglars have struck Norwich. Last night they relieved Henderson & Co. drygoods merchants, of $500 worth of goods. They effected an entrance through the front door by smashing it. The store was ransacked and goods and cash carried off estimated at the above amount. No clue as to the guilty parties has yet been brought to light, but the authorities are out on the search and they confidently expect to cage their men by night.

Another Scorch at Chicago.

CHICAGO, Sept. 30.—Fire in the Warren-Springer building and Lehman & Sons building here to-night caused $250,000 loss. Nine firemen were hurt by falling walls.

The Iron Men's Congress.

NEW YORK, Sept. 30.—The iron and steel congress continued its session to-day. About 75 delegates were present. Important and interesting papers were read and discussed.

The People's Mistake.

People make a sad mistake often with serious results when they neglect a constipated condition of the bowels. Knowing that Burdock Blood Bitters has effectual cure at any stage of constipation, does not warrant us in neglecting to use it at the right time. Use it now.

HAIR PIN RECEIVER.

A small round basket, which may be purchased at any of the fancy stores for a few pennies, is glided or bronzed to form one of the daintiest of hair pin receivers. It is lightly filled with hair, and covered with a pretty top crocheted or knitted in putty colored wool. Stripes of ribbon are made into loops and fall over the edge of the basket, finishing each one with a disc or crescent. Ribbons started from opposite sides serve to suspend it.

Mining News.

Mining experts hdop that cholera never attacks the bowels of the earth, but humanity in general find it necessary to use Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry for bowel complaints, dysentery, diarrhoea, etc. It is a sure cure.

Coal dealers in Toronto on Wednesday advanced the price of coal 25 cents per ton.

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the Spring months, and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not for an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit:

Alex. Dims, Sudbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was intensified by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used douches and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symtoms in a more aggravated form. The relief arising from the use of Nasal Balm—sweet breath, stoppage of the drowpings into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

T. D. D. Lord, 8 Clarence Street, Toronto, says: I wish here to testify to the marvellous healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, to the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicine of another kind that I have detected myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was exceedingly in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shal lnot fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM
INSTANTLY RELIEVES
Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: Mr. daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. After case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

NASAL BALM
POSITIVELY CURES
CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Cheesemaking Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my own case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect satisfaction of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effected a complete cure in a couple of weeks.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cents for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

WHEN THE WIND WHISTLES.

I might not to doubt you, but then is a thief—
All suspicions you wound, and now I am sure
You will not deceive me—to die I'd as lief—
We've loved many days, but the summer is done.
Say, when the wind whistles, as whistle it will,
Will you think of me, sweetheart? Be true to me still?

Last night as I gazed at the star-sprinkled sky,
The day of our parting I pictured again;
I heard the wheels rolling, I heard your good-bye,
And the thought came a flying on pinions of pain;
O when the wind whistles, as whistle it will,
Will be be true to me? Be true to me still?

When the winter winds whistle and snows are all,
Will the roses of summer, the spots where they grew,
The garden, the woods, and the old fashioned hall
Come back to your heart with the girl that you knew?
O when the wind whistles, as whistle it will,
Will you think of me, sweetheart? Be true to me still?

O may every snowflake that falls be a ghost
From the white rose I gave you, to bring back the day
You held me and told me you loved me the most,
And with me forever you promised to stay;
O when the wind whistles, as whistle it will,
Will you think of me, sweetheart? Be true to me still?

CHAPTER LIV.

A LAWFUL WIFE.

SILVIA paused when she had asked the question. She did not know how the minutes fled, she did not know how the time passed. The brilliant scene—the lights, the fair faces, and shining gems—all faded away from her; she saw nothing but the shrewd old face bent over hers. It seemed to her time stood still. Her last question sounded in her ears as loud as though it had been echoed through the room. She was hardly conscious, so intense was her anxious expectation, the sound of Mr. Eversham's voice came to her with a half startled shock.

"Was she his lawful wife?" he repeated, slowly, as though he were weighing the question. "You say she married in all good faith and sincere belief?"

"Most certainly she did," replied Silvia.

"And that they were well known in that part of Scotland where they lived as man and wife?"

"There never was the least doubt of it."

"Was she—your friend—married in her own name?" he continued.

"There was no attempt made at disguising it."

"Did he take an assumed name, or did he use the one he was always known by?"

"That I cannot tell; but he was known in England by the same name—I do not think it was assumed. What do you think, Mr. Eversham—do you believe that marriage was legal?"

Her agitation was so great that the wonder was he did not perceive it. Her face was white, her hands trembled, her lips quivered—she looked like one awaiting a sentence of life or death.

"I should certainly say myself that it was both legal and binding I am sure of one thing, that it was valid before Heaven, and I believe before men."

She did not speak again for some minutes; the strain upon her nerves had been too great; the tight grasp of her fingers relaxed, her lips quivered with a long drawn sigh. It was only by the exertion of the greatest self control that she was able to keep herself from a deadly swoon.

"I am very much interested in your friend," said Mr. Eversham. "Did she never make any claim for her rights, or seek to establish the marriage in any way?"

"No," replied Silvia. "She did as I say, she accepted the doom that was laid upon her without murmur, and without making any effort to redress her wrongs."

"Did he marry again?" asked Mr. Eversham.

"Even that I cannot tell you, but I should imagine so."

"Then he has rendered himself liable to an action for bigamy. I will tell you what I will do, Mrs. Rymer. My legal knowledge is good, and profound, I believe, as far as it goes, but I will not rely on that alone. I have a friend in London, an eminent counselor, Mr Hickstone. I will write to him. Counsel's opinion is generally safe."

"You are very kind to take so much interest," she said.

"Ah! my dear Mrs. Rymer, do not let me deceive you: my interest is for you, not for your friend. If she were not your friend, I should hardly be philanthropist sufficient to take any trouble. Such stories are, unfortunately, so common. However, I will write; and if you will permit me, I shall do myself the pleasure of waiting upon you when the answer comes."

"You do not know how grateful I shall be," she said. "Mr. Eversham, will that answer be decisive?"

"I should be content to abide by it," he replied. "There are few men in the world equal to Holkstone in legal matters. If he says that first marriage was valid, you may safely rely upon it that your friend is all right. If he says 'no,' I am afraid she must abide by the decision."

"If it should be 'yes,' said Silvia, musingly. "What is to be done then?"

Mr. Eversham looked up with great animation.

"Your friend, of course, will please herself, but were I in her place, I should take immediate steps for securing my right place in the world. I should unmask the man, bring an action against him; let all the world see that he is as unworthy of credit, let his true character be known."

A light divine came over her face.

"She will not do that, I think; but it will comfort her to know that she does not really deserve the brand of the world's scorn."

"Did you not say that she had a son?" he asked.

"Yes," she replied, in a faltering voice; "a beautiful, princely boy."

"Then let her sacrifice herself as she may, she has no right to sacrifice him. There I we have moralised long enough, Mrs. Rymer. Here comes Madame Torlani, and with her the Neapolitan princes. Talk of handsome men, there you see them."

He talked to her good naturedly, believing that he was amusing her, and showing great knowledge of the world; but she never heard one word; her whole thoughts were engaged in the one grand wonder as to what the counsel's opinion would be. She interrupted him in the midst of a brilliant description of the late Queen of Naples, by asking him how long it would be, in all probability, before he received the answer?

He looked amused, not angry.

"What a devoted friend you are!" he said, with a laugh. "In ordinary cases we should have to wait three weeks or more; but I will ask Mr. Holkstone to devote a few hours to this at once. He will oblige me, I am sure. You may expect me in ten days from now."

"Ten days!" she repeated to herself. "How shall I live through them? How shall I live through each minute, each hour?"

Then Mrs. Greville came, with many laughing remarks upon their long interview; the carriages were ordered, and brilliant reception of Mme. Torlani was at an end.

"I began to have my suspicions," said Mrs. Greville, laughingly, as they drove home through the moonlit street. "After talking so sentimentally about love I verily believe you intend captivating Mr. Eversham."

"I do not, indeed," said Silvia, with such earnest gravity that Mrs. Greville was still more amused. It was with difficulty she heard and replied to the gay widow's remarks, so much was at stake for her. In ten days she should know whether she had any claim to the name of wife, whither her boy could use his father's name; whether the horrible brand that had depressed and humiliated her was to be removed; whether she might open her heart to the brighter influence of life, and let the mantle of shame and sorrow fall from her. All this was at stake, and bright jesting words seemed cruel to her; she could not understand them; she stood on the balance—life or death.

Ten whole days, and each day was twenty four hours long! Ah! if she could but pass the intervening time in one long dreamless sleep! But every moment must be lived through, and life can not be set aside.

If the answer were "yes," what then? It would take from her the stigma of shame, but it would not, it could not give back to her the lost love, the lost happiness, the lost dreams of her youth. Nothing could give back to her her lost love, the hero she had worshiped; nothing could repay her for the tears she had shed, the anguish she had endured, the burning sense of desolation and misery through which she had passed, nothing could give her back the past, and restore the shattered idols that lay in ruins around her.

During these days of suspense she did not care to look forward. If the answer should be "no," there was nothing for but to bear it patiently to go on doing her best, and endure her lot as best she might.

But if it should be "yes!" She dare not look forward; she dare not think what she should do, what she should say, what steps she should take.

Then it flashed across her suddenly that she should not know where to seek or to find Ulric Rymer. She had a dim, vague idea that he was a man high in station. How was she to find him? In all the years she had lived since he left her she had never once heard his name; and if he were of high rank, as she half believed, she must have heard it.

Was he living or dead? It did not occur to her, as it would have done to many women, that the most sensible and straightforward course would be to write to the lawyers whom he had mentioned in his letter. The thought never once occurred to her.

"When I go back to London," she said to herself, "I will ask about him. I will make all kinds of inquiries. If he be living, I will find him; if he be dead, I will find his grave."

She lived through the ten days—in after years she could not have told how—but they came to an end at last. It was the eleventh when Mr. Eversham made his appearance at the villa, and asked for Mrs. Rymer.

Her heart beat, as she entered the saloon, so loud and so fast she could hardly speak. One glance showed her that the letter had arrived. He held a long strip of parchment in his hand.

She did her best for little Cyril's sake; she nerved herself to sit and speak calmly. Mr. Eversham greeted her warmly.

"I am one day behind my time," he said; "but the letter did not come till this morning, and I have hastened here with it."

She looked up in his face; he saw the intensity of her agitation.

"What does he say?" she murmured.

"Good news for your friend, Mrs. Rymer. The marriage was perfectly legal, and she was his lawful wife!"

CHAPTER LV.

A PLEASANT ANTICIPATION.

It was some time before Silvia could recover herself at all. The world seemed to have ended—time to stand still. The curse that had clung to her for years had fallen from her at last. At last she stood free and unfettered, able to raise her head with its halo of innocence undimmed; able to take her place where she had always most wished to stand—among the honorable rank of women whose pride and boast is a fair name.

Mr. Eversham saw that she was completely overcome.

"You love your friend very much," he said gently. "Now let me read this paper to you."

It was somewhat obscure in its legal phraseology, but the sense of it was plain enough, even to her half-bewildered mind. There might be doubt elsewhere, but there was none in the mind of the clever lawyer. He saw no flaw in the marriage, it was evident.

"The lady has ground sufficient for an action at law," he wrote, "and there was no doubt that it would be decided in her favor."

"So you see, Mrs. Rymer," said Mr. Eversham, "your friend has the law in her own hands."

He saw that she was too much agitated to reply coherently, but no suspicion of the truth came over him. He never dreamed that he had been making inquiries for her, or they would have been more zealously made. He thought her friend must be an old school-mate, to whom she was warmly attached, and he admired her all the more for her intense and kindly sympathy toward others.

It was a relief to Silvia when Mrs Greville entered the room. She advanced to greet the old statesman with outstretched hands. She had so much to say to him that Silvia's silence was unheeded. They talked of Rome, Mme. Torlani, of the brilliant receptions, of everything that was gay and amusing. No one surpassed Mrs. Greville in that kind of conversation—all sparkle, brilliancy, and nonsense. Mr. Eversham enjoyed it very much, and after a time took his leave. Then Mrs Greville went up to Silvia, and, bending over her, kissed her. She was not given to caressing, or any great demonstration, and Silvia looked up with a sudden gleam of affection.

"Secrets still?" said Mrs. Greville "I must not ask what they are, but Silvia, there is a look in your face to-day that I have never seen before."

She raised her head proudly. It was the first time for years, Heaven help her, that she had dared to raise it among honorable women!

"I have heard goods news," she said, briefly. And then other visitors came in and the conversation ended.

But Silvia was left like one bewildered. In vain that day she took up books to read, fancy work, sewing, writing—she could not keep her attention fixed on any one thing for many minutes. All that she could remember—the only idea that she could keep in her mind—was, she was Ulric Rymer's lawful wife.

She could find no rest in-doors; she went out into the sunlit garden, and bending over the pretty fountains saw her face reflected in the clear, shining waters. For the first time for many years its beauty pleased her. She had forgotten what it was like to feel the sent thrill of pleasure or delight in her girlish loveliness; but now, as she looked at the fair face in the tranquil waters she was pleased that Cyril's should be comely in all eyes. Perhaps there came to her a remembrance of the time when some one else had praised that face, and had called it fairest of the fair. She saw herself a difference of expression; the face she had been accustomed to see downcast, with an expression half of shame, half of desire to be hidden from world's sight; the face upon which she gazed now was fearless in its expression of innocence.

Even the dancing waters and sunlit garden oppressed her. She went into her own room, and, kneeling by her bed, she thanked Heaven for having delivered her from the curse and bondage she thought only to lose in death. No one can tell how great her relief was, except those, who, like her, have lived under the shadow of a dark cloud and suddenly find that cloud vanished.

When the first ecstasy of her happiness had passed she was able to think more clearly; she was so nearer her lost love than before; the smart of his desertion was no less; the pain of her loss was keen as ever; but the one great happiness was here. She was before God and man a lawful wedded wife. Of this joy no one could rob her. No one could take it from her. Even if she never saw him again, she should take this source of happiness with her to the grave. She could not decide upon any plans; the only thought that occurred to her was that when she returned to England she would do her best to find him.

A few days afterward Mrs. Greville said to her:

"Silvia, do you know how long it is since we left England?"

"Yes; I have kept a faithful record of each day," was the truthful reply.

"And though you have said nothing about it, though you have neither murmured nor complained, I can imagine that each day has seemed an age, because of your great love for your boy."

"I should like to see him again," said Silvia, wistfully; "but, though I have not actually seen him, three days have never passed without my hearing about him. Mr Hardman has sent me a photograph of him; but my heart aches for one look at him."

"I think we have been away long enough. I purpose returning to London for the season. What do you think?"

A sudden, burning flush dyed her fair face—it was the very desire of her heart put into words.

"I should like it better than anything else in this wide world," said Silvia, eagerly.

"You would have liked it long ago, but have not said so. I suspect we will go to Linghotme, and you shall have your boy there for a week—all to yourself—and then we will go to London."

Silvia was delighted. Mrs. Greville watched the beautiful face with admiring surprise.

"The time will come, I honestly believe, when I shall be jealous of you, Silvia, if you grow much prettier. I must look to my laurels already."

There was great and general disappointment expressed when it was known that Mrs. Greville and her beautiful friend intended leaving Rome; but Silvia looked forward eagerly to the time. Her interest in everything seemed dead; she had but one idea, one thought, one longing, and it was to be in London, where she could make inquiries after her long-lost lover.

Did he know that marriage was legal? She could not tell. At times she thought not—that his intention had been throughout to deceive her; but then he was a man of the world, who understood the world's ways; it was barely possible that he should be mistaken. Knowing it, had he married again? She lost herself in a thousand conjectures; she was almost bewildered by the chaos of thought that seemed at times to overwhelm her.

"You do not regret leaving Rome," said Mrs. Greville to her on the morning of their departure. "You look as delighted as possible over it. Do you forget how many adoring lovers you leave behind?"

"The adoring lovers do not trouble me in the least," said Silvia. "I feel quite indifferently over them."

And the gay widow, who lived upon the breath of adulation and homage, looked with wonder and surprise at the calm, fair face of the woman who had cared so little for the brilliant offers of marriage she had received as barely to remember them.

The journey to England seemed very long to Silvia, every hour increased her impatience. What could Cyril be like? It seemed so long since she had left him. He would be seven years old—a baby no longer, but growing rapidly. How her mother-heart yearned for him!

"How could I have left him?" she asked herself, over and over again. "And yet I have done better for him than if I spent my income in keeping up a house for him."

By Mrs. Greville's kindly expressed wish, she wrote to Mr. Hardman, telling him of her return to England, and her longing desire to see the boy.

"I cannot," she wrote, "go to Hampstead; but I beg of you to send some trustworthy messenger with my boy at once, and let him remain at least a week at Linghotme."

"Home is pleasant, after all," said Mrs. Greville, on the evening of their return. "I ran away from English winters and English fogs, but, after all, they have a charm of their own. I do not think I shall go away again."

It was pleasant. February had come in very fair guise this year. The snowdrops were peeping above the ground, there was a faint odor of violets in the shady parts of the wood, green buds were forming on hedge and tree; there was new life in the fresh, cold, bracing breeze; the sky was blue and clear, and the sun shone. It seemed to Silvia as though all things living shared in her happiness, and spoke to her of a new

CANADA IS ALL RIGHT.

THE whole history of our trade, says the Dunnville Gazette, in respect of breadstuffs and animals is encouraging. It shows that we have drifted into channels affording the greatest hope of profit, and in which we are best able to stand competition. Our climatic conditions are favorable to the raising of the best cattle in the world, and the reputation of our cheese points conclusively to our fitness as a dairy country. We have the stock and we can produce suitable fodder to advantage. But it is to be feared that we have not made the best of our opportunities. We have never been pushed to do our best. We have, perhaps, taken things too easily. Under the stimulus of the McKinley tariff, however, it is certain that we shall have a general awakening, and our primary efforts should be along those lines in which we have done so well during the past 20 years. We have not reached the maximum yet. When it is learned that we supply but 15 per cent. of the British demand for cattle, 8 for sheep, none for beef, 5 for hog products, 1 for butter, 35 for cheese, 2 for wheat, none for barley, none for eggs, 19 for apples, none for flax, none for potatoes and less than one per cent for wool, it will be seen that wide and tempting possibilities are before us along avenues new and old. The winter season is the time when our farmers do most of their thinking, talking and planning, and for the next four or five months there are a number of important matters in relation to what they may sell with profit, which should engage their earnest attention. They may rest assured that in the meantime shippers and merchants are carefully preparing the way for an extended commerce, and every possible assistance will be afforded by the Dominion Government.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE McKinley tariff is getting its work in. The first squeal comes from the Buffalo cattle dealers, who find their lucrative trade in Canadian cattle gone, while the Canadian cattle raiser has the British market wide open to him.

IT appears from the report of the Government of Alaska that prohibition works in the same able way in that Territory as in Maine: "Liquors of the vilest quality are sold openly and in violation of the law." The one sure result of prohibition is plenty of bad whiskey.—New York Sun.

THE tobacco question has obtained a great deal of attention in the religious conferences of late. The other day the Universalists at Buffalo resolved "that this convention regrets the use of tobacco by clergymen in its fellowship." There is probably no brand of tobacco so mild as this resolution. It is worthy of note that of the ladies, who are usually credited with an inveterate enmity to the weed, two voted for and two against the motion.

THE "Bills of exchange and promissory notes act," passed at the last session of Parliament came into effect on the first inst. There are very few absolute changes in the law effected by this legislation. Many additions to the preexisting laws are made, and what has heretofore been mercantile rust in law had the stamp of legal authority more indelibly impressed upon it. If a maker a note is not informed by the absence of date or because it does not state the familiar words "for value received." The law now makes it apparent that a bill is not worthless because other bonded on a statutory holiday. The rule regarding protests stands as it was, although an effort was made while the bill was under consideration to increase the notarial fees for notice of dishonor.

THE question whether female stenographers shall be allowed to work for the courts is agitating Montreal. A short time ago a young lady named Grace H Eaton was examined by a committee of the Montreal bar and duly certificated as competent stenographer to do work in the courts. She at once secured work, and then the trouble began. The male stenographers, with the exception of one or two, declared war against the young lady. Many of the barristers have sided with them, and later a certain section of the occupants of the bench took up a hostile attitude. Indeed, Judge Loranger states, so it is said, that he will not preside at any trial in which she is employed. The reasons giving by opponents of the young lady for their bearing toward her are somewhat vague. They can urge nothing against her competency, her reliability, or her discretion. Their arguments all arrive ultimately at the general statements that it is not fitting work for a woman. If a woman may do stenographic work in court, why may she not practice at the bar or preside on the bench? On the other hand, the young lady will not lack for defenders, and her friends are quite as warm as her foes.

THE FLAG ON THE SCHOOL HOUSE.

Some month ago a deputation waited on the Minister of Education to urge that steps be taken to secure the hoisting of the national flag on the school houses of the province in presence of the children on days memorable in Canadian history. This movement was at the time favorably received and commented on throughout the province, but since that time has not been followed up by anything practical except in the case of the Toronto schools. We are glad to notice one of our leading papers, the Empire, now coming forward to revive the project and give it an impetus by offering a large and handsome flag for competition amongst the schools of each county. The flag is to be the Dominion flag, twelve feet long, and is to be awarded to the school in each county sending in the best essay not exceeding 600 words, written by a pupil, on "The Patriotic Influence of Hoisting the Flag on the Schools." The movement is not a political one in the party sense, and can be heartily approved by all citizens who look to building up and perpetuating patriotic sentiments in our country. The old British flag may be "only a bit of bunting," but around it cluster memories which make the pulse beat faster and the bosom swell with pride—memories, too, in which Canadians as such can proudly claim a share—and the hoisting of the flag on the school houses to remind our children of memorable days in our history will tend to raise up a generation proud of their country and prepared to emulate, if need be, the deeds thus brought to mind. The idea of a competition which will stir up a discussion of historic and patriotic subjects in every school section of the province is a good one, and we hope it will be entered into heartily by the young people of this county.

The East Luther fall fair was held here on Tuesday and Wednesday.

The other day Mr. W Bazendale was married to Miss Nixon, formerly teacher in the branch school here.

A large number of East Luther people are intending to take in the great fair at Erin to-day and to-morrow.

Barber E. E. Hubel has disposed of his tonorial establishment in Grand Valley to John Johnston of Shelburne. The new comer took possession this week.

A short time ago Mr James Carroll had the misfortune to lose a valuable horse in a very peculiar way. The horse was on the road when it was attacked by a vicious hog. The hog made at the horse, completely disembowelling it. Shortly afterwards a boy came along like road riding a horse and the pig started in pursuit, chasing the boy quite a distance. The lad, although very frightened, escaped unhurt.

On Sunday week, says the Star, as two ladies from this village were driving home from Providence church they attempted to pass another rig ahead of them, and drove over the end of a culvert, causing the horse to fall suddenly and one of the ladies was thrown from the buggy forward and landed in front of the struggling animal. The ladies were badly frightened, but escaped without serious injury. One shaft of the rig was broken by the mishap, which was temporarily fixed up by the occupants of the other buggy, and the ladies started on their way homeward, being a little more careful where they drove the blind horse.

A Boston paper tells of a sharper down in Pennsylvania who made a good thing selling bottles of "cold tea" at a picnic. When the bottles were opened they were found to contain just what the seller said they contained; but the purchaser felt aggrieved and called the pedlar a swindler. This reminds us of the British diplomatist who baffled and deceived his opponents by the simple device of telling the truth. They thought he was telling diplomatic lies, laid their plans accordingly, and had the mortification of seeing them all defeated by his frankness.

At the Methodist church on Sunday Rev. M. L. Pearson, the pastor, preached the harvest thanksgiving sermon in an eloquent manner. The edifice was handsomely decorated for the occasion.

The electric lights were not in running order Tuesday night owing to a new alternating dynamo being added to the plant. The night was dark and rainy and people had hard work to scramble home.

The Toronto Globe is undoubtedly a great paper, and its Saturday issues are especially appreciated by the people. The Globe has got settled in its new offices, which are second to none in the Dominion.

Mr. Samuel Hughes, of Toronto, an old Orangeville boy and brother of Mr. J. H. Hughes of this town, was seriously injured at Mimico on Monday by being accidentally knocked off a building. One of the young man's legs were broken.

One of the uptown printing offices was the scene of what might have proved a very serious crime last Thursday. The carrier boy and a type had a little fuss and the boy hurled a knife at the printer which struck him on the leg and made an ugly gash. He had to lay off work for a few days.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH.—A grand entertainment will be given in the town hall on the evening of Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 6th. Proceeds will be devoted to the church spire fund.

PICKPOCKETS.—During the fair here on Friday two well known ladies had their pockets picked of $5 each while on the exhibition grounds. These are the only robberies reported and it is probable the pickpockets did not reap a very rich harvest.

CURLERS' MEETING.—The local club will meet on Friday evening next, at 8 o'clock, for the purpose of organizing and electing officers and appointing representatives to the meeting of the Ontario branch to be held in Toronto on the 21st inst. It is necessary that as large an attendance as possible be secured, as matters of importance are to be considered.

THE NEW PUZZLE.—Unwary persons are beguiled into an attempt to pick out six figures from a row of threes, fives, sevens and nines and make them amount to 21. After the victim has wasted two or three hours in vain attempts to solve the problem it dawns upon him that it utterly impossible, inasmuch as the numbers are all odd, and the sum of six must inevitably be an even one.

THE FIRST WEDDING.—The first wedding held in the Baptist church, corner Zina and First streets, since the edifice came into their possession was consummated yesterday, when Mr. Nelson Chambers and Miss M. J. Phillips of Caledon were made one. Rev. J. L. Gilmour, the pastor who performed the ceremony, followed the usual custom of presenting the bride with a beautiful bible.

BOARD OF TRADE.—The promoters of the movement to organize a board of trade in our town met in the council chamber on Monday evening. The committee appointed at the last meeting submitted rules and regulations of boards of trade of other towns, and it was agreed to proceed with the organization. ## OUR ANNUAL FAIR!

NORTHERN UNION ATTENDED BY

Good Crowds and Good Weather—Everything Ahead of Last Year—Exciting Horse Races on the Second Day—The Promenade Concert Enjoyed by All—The Prizewinners.

One of the best and most successful agricultural exhibitions that was ever held in Orangeville opened here on Thursday last. The weather was a little cool, but that did not have the effect of keeping the people at home.

Space in the pavilion was taxed to its utmost capacity. The first floor contained fruit, vegetables, roots, grain, furniture, the Northwest exhibit, flowers preserves, bread, musical instruments etc.

The fruit and vegetable exhibits were without doubt the best seen in this section of the country for years. The same may be said of dairy products etc. One of the most pleasing rustic exhibits were those of Manitoba and Northwest products, which were tastily arranged by Mr. James McCutcheon in the southwest end of the hall.

The second floor was occupied by ladies' work, fine arts, sewing machines, boots and shoes and many other articles.

IN THE EVENING.

The promenade concert in the evening was a brilliant affair. The hall was lighted by electricity and every article could be seen as plain as in daytime. The Glee club added greatly to the evening's enjoyments by the rendition of several excellent pieces. The Citizens band and the Orangeville orchestra also helped to fill the musical program. But for novelty the public school children were awarded first place. For some time past Miss Smith has been instructing them in club-swinging, and the way the youngsters acquitted themselves was highly creditable. About thirty of the little dears treated the audience to very difficult calisthenic exercises, and when they were through they were heartily applauded.

NOTES.

Fakirs were prominent by their absence.

Miss Dulcie Wallace was awarded 1st prize for best lady rider.

A Highland piper was on the grounds and made things lively in his immediate vicinity.

Misses Bertha Kelly and Bertha Green captured the first prize for individual club swinging.

John Hicks conducted the refreshment booths under the grand stand to the satisfaction of all.

The gate receipts amounted to something over $300; between $50 and $60 over the receipts of last year.

Messrs Beswick & Aikin occupied a large amount of space on the first floor of the hall by a grand display of furniture. This firm handles everything in the shape of furniture, from the cheapest chair to the most elegant parlor suite. They had several gorgeous parlor and bedroom suites on exhibition which were greatly admired by the throng.

The exhibit under the control of Gale & Kerr, representing the line of goods sold by them, is certainly deserving special notice, consisting of Karn organs and pianos, Raymond sewing machines, in large numbers and great variety, they added greatly to the attractiveness of the exhibition as a whole and reflect credit on the firm for arranging the same.

On the second floor at the north end of the hall the Singer sewing machine company had a magnificent display of those celebrated machines and the work done by them. The machines are too well known around here to refer to, but the excellent samples of work should not be passed unnoticed. The articles in white raised wool, arrascene and etching were something grand. Mrs. W J. Price of this town, who was awarded first prize for best machine made shirt, used a Singer. Another beautiful exhibit of the company was a large doll in a glass case. The doll's clothes were made on this machine. Mr. T. Hanes, the manager, would like to secure five or six men to sell these machines.

The most popular education now a days is one that teaches how to get on in the world. The institution that can do this better than any other in the Dominion, is the College of Commerce, Toronto, corner Yonge and Gerrard. The plan of actual business practice is more ingenious and advantageous than any other used. This school is headquarters for obtaining a business or shorthand education. Nothing like it in Canada. This College is known to get more applications for office help from different parts of Canada and the U. FALLEN FROM GRACE.

A Methodist Pastor Found Guilty of Adultery and Expelled.

MONTREAL, Oct. 14.—Religious and social circles were shocked today when it became generally known that one of the most popular and beloved pastors in Montreal had been expelled from the church and that at last he stood self-confessed and stripped of his clerical garb. The sinner in question is the Rev. A. B. Crochet, who for some time past has been stationed at Point St. Charles. He was accompanied by a girl of 20 years, with whom he left the city a few days ago, and it is now known that at least one child was born. Mr. Crochet has confessed and will accept his punishment, namely, expulsion from the Presbyterian church.

A FAITHFUL WIFE.

She Sticks to Her Husband Through Good and Ill Report.

MONTREAL, Oct. 14.—Alexander H. Grant, the young man who was arrested on the accusation of stealing $141 from Alexander Dube, was committed to the Queen's Bench and admitted to bail by Mr. Dandurand. The amount fixed was $800. Mr. Grant protests his innocence, and expresses confidence as to the result of the trial at the Court of Queen's Bench. He is a tall, gentlemanly-looking man, slightly bald, and certainly does not look like a person who would blight his future for a trifling sum like the one involved. He is a married man and lives, or more properly lived, at 64 Beaconsfield avenue, Toronto. His wife, a pretty blonde lady, was in court yesterday and needless to say, was much affected by her husband's position. She loyally stands up for his innocence, however, and advises him to fight the case. In conversation with a reporter she said that she did not know of her husband's arrest until she read of it in The World. Her mother, Mrs. Best, accompanied her to the city, and they intend to remain until the matter is settled.

Dead While Dressing.

PETERBORO, Oct. 14.—George Foley, Rubidge-street, went home at 6 o'clock last evening and found his wife lying dead upon the floor of her bedroom, apparently having been stricken down while in the act of dressing herself. She was apparently as well as usual at noon. Her face and chest were badly congested and from the appearances death had evidently been caused by apoplexy. The deceased had evidently washed up her dinner dishes and then gone to her bedroom to dress. She had removed her undercoat and was replacing it with clean linen when the death stroke overtook her.

Babies Burned in Their Bed.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—Mrs. James Albridge left her twin babies asleep in their cradle in her house No. 204 Sullivan-street, Brooklyn, yesterday and went to a neighbor's for a few minutes. During her absence a two-year-old brother who had also been left in the house set fire to the cradle and the twins were burnt.

No Change in the Second Book Tariff.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 14.—The treasury department has decided that books imported for the use of colleges, schools, etc., are admitted to this country under the new tariff law substantially as they were admitted under the old tariff law and subject to the same restrictions.

A Green Goods Dealer Convicted.

TORONTO, Oct. 15.—At the assizes yesterday F. Atwood was found guilty of attempting to purchase counterfeit money. The only evidence given was that of Detective Rogers and Grier, who trapped the prisoner. The outline of the case is this. A letter, addressed to H. S. Young, Fort Lee, N.J., and signed by F. C. Atwood, Carleton Junction, Ont., proposing to buy counterfeit money of Young, found its way to the dead letter office at Washington.

It was forwarded to the Attorney-General and Detective Grier went to Niagara Falls, wrote Atwood over the name of Young to send him at the Rossin House on June 30 last. Grier then went to the Rossin, registered as "H. S. Young" and received Atwood. He showed him some Bank of Commerce bills which were purported to be counterfeit and Atwood expressed his wish to buy, when he was promptly arrested.

Will Decline to Federate.

PITTSBURG, Oct. 14.—Chauncey M. Depew has accepted the invitation to address the international convention of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers here Thursday. The convention will open to-morrow. It is given out semi-officially that the convention will reject all offers of federation with any other association or organization of trainmen. Delegates to the number of 600 are here from all parts of the United States and Canada.

Newfoundland Will Make a Deal.

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Oct. 14.—Hon. Robert Bond, Colonial Secretary for Newfoundland, held an alliance to-day at the Board of Trade with Premier Smith and other prominent men connected with the fisheries. The object was to submit a proposition admitting products of the Newfoundland fisheries free in return for which American fishermen would have free access to bait and other outfits in Newfoundland.

A Boy Robs a Stage Coach.

UTICA, N.Y., Oct. 14.—The overland stage was robbed on Sunday night, 19 miles north of this place. The Wells Fargo treasure box and the United States mail sacks were taken. The robber was caught at Cloversville yesterday afternoon. He proved to be a boy about 18 years old and a stranger.

Lost With All on Board.

NEW YORK, Oct. 14.—A telegram from Boston contains the report of the loss at sea of the ship Magellan, which sailed from Boston for Liverpool with a cargo of oil for Vladivostock. The Magellan was commanded by Capt. Marshall and it is believed that everyone on board perished.

Will Lose His Leg.

PORT HOPE, Oct. 14.—About 10 o'clock this morning Mr. Frank Grimson and a number of other workmen were pushing a derrick with stacks of square timber on them, near Barrett's Terrace, when he slipped and fell, both wheels of the heavily laden cart passing over his right leg, tearing away the flesh from the bone from the ankle to the knee. He will probably lose his leg.

Postoffice Burglary.

BRACEBRIDGE, Oct. 14.—A bold and partially successful attempt has been made to burglarize the postoffice at Coldsen. The thieves cut out two of the planks of the floor upstairs and got into the rear store. With a lever they forced the postoffice door. Just at this moment, about 4 a.m., several citizens of Coldsen returned from a funeral and the noise alarmed the thieves, who fled with their booty, some stamps and silver and a large quantity of silk handkerchiefs, shirts and other dry goods.

a d frighter life.

Lingholme had never looked so fair. When she left it the consciousness of shame and sorrow had hidden the beauty of the world from her, as a dark veil spread over the fair creation would have done. The veil was removed now; she could see the beauty of earth and of heaven. Sorrow and pain existed still for her, but not shame; and everything else seemed easy to bear.

It was on the third day after their arrival that the letter came telling her that little Cyril would be at Lingholme that day. Her face grew perfectly white as she read, and Mrs. Greville, looking at her with a kindly smile, said:

"Never mind keeping up appearances my dear; leave me, and go and prepare for him. Perhaps, if I had had a little child, I might have loved it as you do yours."

FATE'S FATAL HAND.

DROWNED AT THE HOUR FIXED FOR A MURDERESS TO HANG.

Strange Story of a Horrible Murder and the Way it Was Avenged. A Montreal Sensation of Long ago Revived.

MONTREAL, Oct. 7.—Susan Kennedy, serving a life sentence in the Kingston Penitentiary for a murder committed in Montreal eleven years ago, died this week of consumption, and with her life ends one of the most remarkable chapters in the criminal history of Canada.

The crime for which she suffered was the murder of Mary Gallagher under peculiarly atrocious circumstances, the body of the victim being found with the head and right arm lopped off and otherwise mutilated. After committing the deed the murderess went quietly to sleep in the same room with the body of the victim.

Susan's history is the old one of man's duplicity and woman's frailty; of gradual descent from respectability and comparative affluence to the lowest depths of degradation, a terrible murder, and ending with a lingering death in prison after a narrow escape from the gallows.

Twenty years ago she came to Montreal from Dublin, Ireland, leaving a comfortable home and parents who all but worshipped her. She came to relatives with whom she remained for some time, but she quarrelled with them and secured a situation as governess with the family of a prominent citizen still in business here.

Young, more than ordinarily handsome, full of life and vigor, the spirited young Irish girl was courted and flattered to her heart's content. In an evil moment her employer accomplished her ruin. She consented to a marriage with Jacob Myers, a common laborer, and half intoxicated, whether as painfully as wondered. She dropped out of the lives and was soon forgotten, or, if remembered at all, remembered with a shrug, a laugh, or perhaps from the more charitable a passing word of pity.

But Susan Kennedy, or rather Susan Myers, was destined to become notorious. Wedded to a man she could but detest, who indulged to a week intellect all the detestable and contemptible qualities of which human nature is capable, weary of life she took to drink. Going rapidly from bad to worse she eventually moved in the slums and became one of the most notorious of the characters which infested that quarter of the city.

Time and again she was arrested for drunkenness and disorderly conduct, and such a terror had she become that when the word was passed round that "Susan Kennedy is drunk again tonight," the policeman on that beat was reinforced by two or three others, as no officer was able to arrest her unaided.

On one occasion she threw a woman with whom she had an altercation from a second story window to the yard below.

She was invariably found to have a small hatchet with a razor-like edge sliding to a girdle beneath her skirt. This she seemed to exercise greatly and was feared and shunned when it was known that she was armed. For years she alternated between periods of hard drinking and comparatively quiet life at home.

Released on the morning of the proceeding to celebrate by a drunk of large proportions. Meeting a casual acquaintance, Michael Flannagan, they adjourned to Susan's apartments, where, fearing the husband Myers, and boy started to hold high carnival. Late in early hour the following morning a carousing went on, and was heard by the more quiet and otherwise outraged neighbors and officers to terminate in the morning hours in a fearful quarrel, ending in murder. Flannagan, who had undertaken to assist at a dismemberment, fled and another on the evening of the murder. Flannagan, in fact, clearly showed his hand by attempting to pawn that day the brooch given to Mary Gallagher the night before, and gave the alarm. [illegible] a description of the person [illegible] the sale of the brooch. Susan and Flannagan sleeping with the same and around the house were broken open by Mary Ryan.

Susan and Flannagan were arrested and tried for the murder in the following June before the court of Queen's Bench. She was convicted, and in her confession exonerated Flannagan from any knowledge of the crime, stating that he was asleep and knew nothing of the occurrence until awakened by the police in the morning.

She was sentenced to be hanged, but was reprieved almost at the last moment and her sentence commuted to imprisonment for life.

And now follows the most curious incident in connection with this case. Flannagan, who had obtained employment as a bargeman on the canal at Lachine, while stepping from one boat to another on August 1, slipped, fell between the two into the canal and was drowned, thus meeting his death on the very day and hour originally set apart for Susan's execution.

A judgment from Heaven, said the religious; a singular coincidence, said the ungodly.

"French Joe" Drowned.

KINGSTON, Oct. 7.—A labourer known as French Joe was drowned off the wharf at Beasley's Island. The night being very dark it is supposed he walked over the edge of the wharf. The body was recovered in about twenty-five minutes, but life was extinct. Deceased's proper name was Joseph De Lemond.

The Lobster Catch.

HALIFAX, Oct. 7.—During the present season 450,000,000 of young lobsters have been hatched and placed in Fortune, Placentia, Conception, Trinity, Bonavista and Green Bays, Nfld. Many fishermen report seeing enormous numbers of Tom cods of small size, which are also the product of the Government hatchery, the young fry planted early in the summer being reached that stage of growth.

FOUGHT A DUEL FOR LOVE,

AND THEN COMMITTED SUICIDE THROUGH REMORSE.

Killed Himself Here After Slaying His Rival Abroad—A Young Man Who Fled from His European Home Because Tired of Life and Taken Ascetic.

NEW YORK, Oct. 7.—Forced to flee to this country because, in a duel, he had killed his rival in a love affair, and made desperate by his misfortunes here and the fact that he could not secure the employment to which his abilities entitled him, Leopold Fedra, a handsome man of 28 years, took poison Sunday and, rushing out of his house, died in a stranger's arms.

Fedra was born in Reichenberg, Bohemia, and was the only son of August Fedra, the Imperial Royal Counsel of the country courts of Austria, who is now dead. After studying at the University in Reichenberg, Fedra entered a medical school in Vienna. When within six months of his graduation time he met and fell in love with Wilhelmina Von Sicklin and his love was returned. He quarrelled with a fellow-student, who was also a suitor for Wilhelmina's hand. A challenge passed and a duel was arranged and Fedra killed his opponent with a pistol shot. This was a little more than a year ago, and Leopold at once came to this country.

He had no friends and was obliged to do all kinds of menial work in order to live. At first he worked as a porter, but lately he had been a waiter and helper in various restaurants but of late has been out of employment. While the Rose family were at tea on Sunday afternoon Fedra suddenly entered the room, looking wild and haggard. "Goodby," he said, and then left the room. He was seen to walk across the street and then stagger and fall. He was quickly taken back to his house, but was dead before medical assistance could be summoned. Death was due to arsenical poisoning.

Among Fedra's effects was found a lock of brown hair encircled with a piece of paper and placed unfaded in his empty purse. There were also a letter from a woman who signs herself Laura and his attestation papers, which he secured last March. Written in German was a will which was of recent date, in which he said that his personal property amounted to 22,000 florins, in cash, and this and other real estate consisting of two mortgages on houses in Reichenberg and Vienna be divided among his mother, his two sisters and Vincent Wagner of Reichenberg. The property bequeathed to the latter, the will directs, is to be delivered upon Dec. 27, 1891, which would have been Fedra's twenty-seventh birthday.

MANY LIVES LOST.

Another Conflict Between Guatemalan and Salvadorians on the Border.

CITY OF GUATEMALA, Oct. 7.—Advices received here say the Guatemalans and Salvadorians are fighting again on the frontier. It states war has also been precipitated owing to the inability of the Guatemalan Government to exchange prisoners with Salvador. The first named government shot every Salvadorian soldier captured in the late war. The fight occurred on the borders of the two countries. Barillas has not been satisfied with the peace treaty brought about by the Diplomatic Corps, and it has been generally accepted opinion that a new war would break out at the close of the coffee gathering season, but no one was prepared for so early an opening of hostilities.

Guatemala's finances are at present in a very bad condition, but it is understood that a part of the Cotton loan will soon be delivered. She also lacks generals to command her troops. In every way Salvador is in a better condition to sustain war than her larger enemy. Ezeta has the full confidence of the masses, and the officers of her army are superior to those of Guatemala. It is stated also that Salvador has plenty of money and can get almost any amount she wants.

Some of the articles of the peace treaty have been considered by Salvador as not favorable to her dignity, and the Salvadorians are prepared to fight again, but more earnestly than ever.

A TALE OF TWO PRIESTS.

One Robs His Benefactor and Escapes From Jail—The Robbed Man also Arrested.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Oct. 7.—A short time ago a priest visited a clergyman at Garden River, enjoyed his hospitality and stole a portion of his library. The thief got away with his booty and was followed by a telegram to stations along the Algoma Branch, but failed to intercept him. Two days after the robbery the venerable divine started off along the line and was himself arrested by an enterprising officer, who refused to accept the statement of his prisoner that he was the party who had been robbed. Superintendent McNaughton approached the real thief on the main line of the railway, but the fellow took out of his temporary lock-up and made good his escape. The stolen books were recovered, which is only a slight solace to the feelings of the gentleman who started out to catch a thief and got himself locked up instead.

Mr. T. A. Mackinnon Banqueted.

MONTREAL, Oct. 7.—Mr. T. A. Mackinnon, who recently resigned the position of manager of transportation of the Canadian Pacific Railway to accept the general managership of the Boston, Concord and Montreal Railway, was last evening entertained at a dinner at the St. James Club by the officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Mr. W. C. Van Horne, president of the company, occupied the chair, having on his right the guest of the evening, and on his left, Sir Donald A. Smith, K.C.M.G., M.P., while the vice-chair was occupied by Mr. T. G. Shaughnessy. Each of the gentlemen delivered addresses eulogizing Mr. Mackinnon.

Charged With Criminal Libel.

OTTAWA, Oct. 7.—Fred. L. Jones, a writer for the American press, appeared in the Police court this morning on a charge of criminal libel, preferred by Messrs. Arnoldi & Co., proprietors of the Caledonia Springs in Prescott county. Jones telegraphed to The Boston Herald that the hotel people used hydrogen gas water in the baths instead of sulphur water. The company now sue him on a charge of criminal libel.

Canadian Lumber Duties.

MONTREAL, Oct. 7.—A special from Ottawa to The Gazette says that J. B. Booth, one of Canada's biggest lumber men, had an interview with the Commissioner of Customs yesterday regarding the intentions of the Government as to the removal of the export duty on logs, so as to permit of Canadian lumbermen getting a reduction on imported sawn lumber from Canada into the United States, as provided by the McKinley bill.

Many subscribers to the Toronto summer carnival have failed to pay up, and the unfavorable criticisms of the show are blamed for their delinquency. A committee has been appointed to audit the accounts and engage a collector.

We hear that a young (?) man from the country called at the Free Press office the other day to smash the editor pro tem for not giving a send off to an event that took place after the paper was issued. After a few pointed words of counsel from the pro tem editor, the young (?) man brushed the hay seeds out of his hair and retired.—Georgetown Herald.

The following from a Guelph paper might apply to black boards throughout the land.—The G. T. ### THE G. T. R. AND C. P. R.

A Combination of Interests Between these Two Great Lines Possible.

MONTREAL, Oct. 3, 1890.—From time to time rumors have gone forth that negotiations were on foot between the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways looking to a union of these two great trunk lines—or, if not a union, at least to closer relations, and, perhaps, a pooling of receipts. Is there anything in it? Is the question an interested public is asked? Thus far apparently there has not, but once more the attention of the public is conspicuously drawn to these roads, and the knowing ones assert that this time some united move is contemplated. The prolonged visit of Sir Joseph Tyler; his visit to the North west, and the proposed hostile legislation threatened by the United States towards these two great roads, give rise to various rumors, and the question is again asked, "What will be the result? Will they combine to protect their mutual interests?" Time will tell; but, in the meantime, there is one matter upon which those connected with these great railways unanimously agree, namely, that Nasal Balm is the only remedy for the effectual cure of cold in the head and catarrh, in all forms and stages. The following testimony from two well known officials of these lines bear out this assertion. Mr. J. D. Kennedy, G. T. R. agent at Brockville, says: "A short treatment with Nasal Balm radically removed all symptoms of my catarrh. The preparation is pleasant and easy to use, and gives immediate and permanent relief." Mr. Gordon Starr, C. P. R. agent at Brockville, says: "For some years I was troubled with a severe case of catarrh, and was seldom free from catarrhal headache. I tried many remedies, but without avail. I procured a bottle of Nasal Balm, and in less than a week my headaches had disappeared, together with all other symptoms of catarrh. I believe Nasal Balm is a boon to all suffering from this terrible malady." Every sufferer from cold in the head or catarrh should at once procure a bottle of Nasal Balm. No other remedy can possibly take its place. For sale by all dealers, or sent, post paid, on receipt of price (50c. small size, and $1 large size bottles) by addressing FULFORD & Co., Brockville, Ont.

A DANGER SIGNAL!

A Cold in the Head may be aptly termed a danger signal warning you that if neglected that dangerous and disagreeable disease, Catarrh, is sure to follow, perhaps leading to Consumption and the grave. At no season of the year is Cold in the Head more prevalent than during the spring months and at no other season do the people of this country suffer more generally from Catarrh, with all its disagreeable and annoying effects. Do not for an instant neglect either of these troubles, but apply NASAL BALM, the only remedy that will give instant relief and effect a thorough cure. The following testimonials from among thousands in our possession bear witness to its sterling merit.

Alex. Burns, Sidbury, Ont., says: I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh seven or eight years, and it was attended by consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears and sickening pains in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The relief arising from the use of Nasal Balm: Sweet breath, stoppage of the drowping into the throat, (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact, it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

T. D. D. Loyd, 8 Clarence street, Toronto says: I wish here to testify to the unequalled healing powers of your Nasal Balm. I have been troubled for three years by what the doctors call post nasal catarrh, and have tried everything in the city that could be obtained, in the shape of catarrh cures, and found no permanent relief from any of them, till a friend one day advised me to try your Nasal Balm, and I find that even one bottle has done me more good than all the medicines put together that I have persecuted myself with before. I was very much troubled with spitting and hawking, especially in the morning, so much so that my throat was continually in a raw condition, but I am now beginning to know what it is to be able to speak freely. I shal lnot fail to recommend it to any of my friends suffering from the like disease.

NASAL BALM
INSTANTLY RELIEVES
Cold in the Head.

A. W. Mallory, Mallorytown, Ont., says: My daughter suffered for years from a most distressing and annoying Catarrh. Her case was under the treatment of eminent physicians in the United States and Canada. Two months use of Nasal Balm has had more beneficial effects than all former treatment combined.

L. D. Dion, Dept. Railways and Canals, Ottawa, says: I am very glad to give you to-day the testimony that Nasal Balm has completely cured my catarrh, from which I suffered for nearly three years.

NASAL BALM
POSITIVELY CURES
CATARRH.

D. Derbyshire, Mayor of Brockville and President of the Ontario Creamery Association, says: Nasal Balm beats the world for Catarrh and Cold in the Head. In my own case it effected relief from the first application.

Isaac Waterman, Imperial Oil Co'y, Petrolia, Ont., says: Nasal Balm gave me the most perfect satisfaction of any medicine I ever used for Cold in the Head. I found it easy to use, quick in giving relief and effect a complete cure in a couple of hours.

If Nasal Balm is not kept in stock by your dealer it will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 Cent for small and $1 for large size bottles) by addressing

WHICH WILL IT BE?

Which is the fairest, a rose or a lily?
Which is the sweetest, a peach or a pear?
Merry's coquettish, and charming is Milly;
Dora is gentle and fair.
Sweet as a flower was her face when I kissed
Love is the roseate and glory of life,
Milly, my playmate, I love "like a sister,"
But Dora I choose for my wife.

That is right, young man, marry the girl you love, by all means. If she will have you. Should her health become delicate and her beauty fade after marriage, remember that this is usually due to functional disturbances, weaknesses, irregularities, or painful disorders peculiar to her sex, in the cure of which Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is guaranteed to give satisfaction, or money refunded. See the printed certificate of guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic, or strength-giver.

AN AUTUMN REVERIE.

Was it better? Did Tom mean all that he said?
'Twas a good chance—a hasty word spoken.
I turned and the poor boy grew awfully red
When I said our engagement was broken.
He was in earnest, and I thought so, but then
Some raw love without rhyme, without reason.
There is always something deceptive in men.
I discover it so every season.

Every season—let's see, why this is my fourth—
But such short years, and why should I marry?
Though peps this year is exceedingly wroth,
He is right—'tis a long time to tarry.
And Tom's not so bad—ah, no, many are worse,
He is jealous, but wealthy and clever,
Though I wish he wouldn't address me in verse,
Were we parted, as I said, forever?

Forever? I see him now turning away,
For he loves me—will love change to hating?
No, no, I pray not. What, a card, James, you say?
Why, it's Tom! Is the gentleman waiting?
I will be down at once—but, why did he call?
I had almost accepted a letter.
Do I love him. Well—yes—perhaps after all
I will take him for worse—or for better.

CHAPTER LVI.

MRS. GREVILLE'S VISITOR.

THE February evening was drawing to a close; the purple light lingered over the trees; the sunshine had long since faded; the air was cool and fresh with the fragrance of early violets and the sweet, moist woodlands. Surely, under the broad, blue heavens, on the face of the fair, tranquil earth there was no heart so impatient as that of the beautiful young mother, who was pacing, with rapid footsteps, the western terrace, from whence she could see the carriage-drive. The little boy was to reach Lingholme at five, and since four she had been waiting for him.

She had prepared a little room by the side of her own. She had prepared his little bed. Everything that a mother's heart could suggest, or a mother's hand could do, had been done, and she was waiting for him now with a heart full of impatience. It seemed to her that every hour was an age, every moment an hour. The light was fading in the western skies—would he never come?

Suddenly she saw the carriage turning round the grand drive. She flew rather than walked. She opened the door. She cried in a loud, vehement voice:

"Cyril! Cyril! where are you?"

The next she had him in her arms. She covered his face with kisses and tears she lavished on him every fond name, every tender word, every loving epithet, until the child looked up at her in wonder.

"Do I frighten you, my darling?" she cried. The carriage was driven on to the house then, and Cyril was standing under the chest nut trees in the grand drive. She had flung herself on her knees at his feet, and was clinging to him with a loving, passionate clasp. "Do I frighten you, my darling?" she asked again. "My heart hungered for one look at you, my soul seemed thirsty. Cyril call me 'mother'—say 'mother' to me, so that I may know I am not dreaming."

The child clasp his arms slowly round her neck.

"Mother," he said, gently. "I am so pleased to be with you again."

The voice seemed to pierce her heart with its sweet, familiar tones—it was Ulric's voice. It had the same ring, the same music, the self-same accent and inflections. She could have fancied it was Ulric who spoke to her, and she looked up, with a low, passionate cry, into the child's face.

As she gazed, her own grew white with the pallor of death. Was fancy playing her some trick? Were her own senses deluding her? The face was very young, smooth and fair, but it was Ulric Rymer's face in miniature. There was the same rich, clustering hair, the broad white brow, the eloquent eyes, the beautiful lips, the perfectly molded features. One drop of water did not resemble another more closely than the face of Cyril, the son, resembled that of Ulric, the father.

A low, passionate cry, and then she laid her head on the child's breast.

She was face to face once more with the love of her heart, the love of her youth.

"How shall I live and look on him?" she murmured.

Then the child's voice roused her.

"Mother, those tall trees almost frighten me. See, they are bending their heads as though they were going to speak to me. Shall we go home?"

She roused herself from that passionate trance of anguish, and took the little hand in hers.

"It is such a pretty home, Cyril," she said, gently. "We have flowers and birds. I shall find a pony for you to ride."

"Is it our home?" asked the child. "Is it yours?"

"No. We shall have a home some day, Cyril; but this is not ours. It belongs to a very good, kind lady, who will be pleased to see you."

The mention of a pony quite opened the child's heart. He ran by his mother's side, prattling gayly, telling her all his school experience, his play, his lessons, forgetting to be shy, only remembering that she was the darling mother he had longed so intensely to see. Perhaps it was one of the proudest moments of her life when she took the boy into Mrs Greville's boudoir.

The mistress of Lingholme, notwithstanding all her little affectations, was a kindly natured lady. She gave the little stranger the warmest welcome. She took him in her arms, and kissed the beautiful face, then looked so earnestly at it that Silvia wondered.

"My boy does not resemble me," she said, gently.

"No, not in the least; but his face recalls some one or other to my mind—I can not imagine whom it is like. Is he like his father?"

Then for one half moment Silvia's heart stood still. Would it hurt him, her idolized child, to say that he had his fathers face? No, for she was his father's wife. It was half-proudly, half sorrowfully that she answered:

"I think he is. There seems to me a great likeness."

Mrs. Greville was still looking at the child with the same intent, earnest gaze.

"I can not remember whom it is that he resembles closely. His face is full of pleasant associations for me. Was your husband an Englishman, Silvia?"

"Yes, he was English," she replied, and then the matter dropped; but whenever Mrs. Greville's eyes fell upon the child they took the same wandering expression.

For a few days Silvia was perfectly happy; she almost forgot her troubles in the presence of that beloved and beautiful child. With an anxious heart she watched his very action, and listened to every word. There was no taint of selfishness in him. Once or twice she had grown half faint with dread, lest having his father's face he should inherit his faults; but she saw no trace of them, and from the depths of her heart she thanked God. He was a brave, generous unselfish child, full of noble instincts and good impulses; it never seemed to occur to him to be mean or selfish. Mrs. Greville watched him with shrewd amusement.

"Your boy ought to be a prince, Silvia," she said, laughing.

"He is the most princely child I ever met; his ideas are superb."

Silvia sighed. A prince! Oh! if she could only give him a name that was stainless and unsullied, she would ask no better gift from Heaven than that.

When the week was ended Mrs. Greville was the first to object to his leaving Lingholme.

"It is so long since he has been with you, let him stay now that he is here. I have changed my mind over London; I shall not go yet. Lady Courcie has a party of friends coming to the Mount, and I know several of them. I shall stay here a few weeks longer."

Had she not so remained, would the story have been different?

So it was arranged by general consent that little Cyril should remain until they went to London; then his mother could take him to school herself.

Two days afterward came an invitation that Mrs. Greville had expected, for her to go to the Mount to meet Lady Courcie's friends.

"You must amuse yourself as well as you can my dear," she said to Silvia. "I suppose you will want nothing else, now that you have the boy."

So for a few days mother and child were inexpressibly happy together; then came a note from Mrs. Greville:

"I shall not be home until Wednesday," it ran, "and I shall bring a friend with me—Lady Dynecourt. Her husband is away just at present, and she is not very strong; the noise and excitement of a large party are too much for her. I have asked her to spend a few days quietly at Lingholme. Will you see that everything is ready for her?"

Silvia suddenly remembered the photograph of the beautiful face, and felt pleased at the prospect of seeing one so charming as she felt sure Lady Dynecourt must be. She looked forward to the visit as to a new source of pleasure, and busied herself in having everything ready for the expected arrival.

It was night when Mrs. Greville and her visitor arrived. Little Cyril had gone to sleep, and Silvia sat in the drawing room alone, awaiting the coming of the ladies. At first sight she was charmed with Lady Dynecourt—there was something winning and noble about her patrician beauty; yet, to Silvia's keen instinct, there was something mournful too. She was most gracious, most charming, most amiable, but despite all the grace and sweetness, there was an undercurrent of of melancholy.

"She is very lovely," thought Silvia, "very graceful, but I am sure she is not happy."

Yet not one word fell from Lady Dynecourt's lips that could be taken as a sign of melancholy. She joined in all conversations, she had a very beautiful smile, a most charming fashion of seeming to give her whole attention to every one who claimed it; but Silvia saw underneath all this a constant current of sadness—a constant return to some secret source of unhappiness.

Lady Dynecourt was quite delighted with Silvia; her beauty, her grace, her affectionate, warm-hearted disposition seemed to have a great attraction for her. When they parted for the night, she held Silvia's hand in her own.

"Mrs. Greville tells me you have a little son staying with you," she said, wistfully.

Something in her face made Silvia ask:

"Have you any children, Lady Dynecourt?"

The beautiful face grew pale.

"No," she replied, gently; "I have none."

CHAPTER LVII.

A STRANGE RESEMBLANCE.

There is nothing, after all, so limited as human knowledge. A man devotes his whole life time to the study of one particular star, one planet, one bird, and he dies without knowing one-half there is to know. Another gives his whole thoughts and attention to the solving of a problem, yet dies leaving it unsolved. Silvia Rymer had but one object in life—it was the finding of her lost lover. She was under the same roof with his wife, but knew no more of it than did Lady Dynecourt, in her turn, suspect who she was. They were fated to meet, and they had met, but it was without recognition. The two, both betrayed by the same love, had crossed each other's paths at last.

The morning after her arrival Lady Dynecourt had gone out in the grounds alone. She had a love, almost amounting to a passion, for trees, and from the windows of her room she had caught sight of the beautiful chestnut drive and had hastened there. Mrs. Greville was far too accomplished a hostess to dream of interference. If her guest preferred a solitary ramble, it seemed to her the perfection of good breeding to indulge that wish; so Lady Clotilde wandered under the chestnuts, feeling more at her ease and happier than she had done for some time. She stopped to listen to the faint chirping of the birds, to watch the white heads of the pretty snowdrops. A faint color flushed her beautiful, noble face, a faint smile played round her lips. Only Heaven know what fair dreams of her youth returned to her as she enjoyed this hour among the leafless trees.

The sound of a child's laughter struck her, a burst of melodious laughter that seemed to cheer and brighten the air around. She looked up with a quick, bright smile. Like many childless women, she had a passionate love of children. In the far distance she saw a little boy at play, and Mrs. Rymer was just crossing the drive to go to him. Lady Clotilde hastened to join her.

"That is your little son?" she said, and Silvia looked up with a quick, warm flush.

"How I envy you!" continued her ladyship. "If I had been offered my choice between the wealth of all the world and a little child, I would have chosen the child."

Silvia's beautiful face, full of sympathy, was raised to hers.

"I do not wonder at it," she replied; "there is no gift of Heaven so good."

"I often wondered about it," continued Lady Dynecourt. "I read such shocking, cruel things in the papers, of children killed and starved, and cruelly treated! If Heaven had only trusted one to me, I would have taken such care of it—and they are given to those who do not care for them. I feel tempted sometimes to wonder how it is."

"I have often thought of it, too," said Silvia; and they walked together down the long drive.

"To me, or rather in my case," said Lady Clotilde, "it seems very hard. My husband, Lord Dynecourt, longs so intensely for a son and heir. The property at his death passes to a stranger, one of the branch of the family whom he dislikes; that makes it so much more painful. Every allusion to the future makes my heart ache. When I see him indifferent over everything connected with the property, I think directly it is because a stranger must step in where his son should tread."

"It must be a great trouble to you," said Silvia; "I can understand it so well." And to herself she thought: "Every heart knoweth its own bitterness, and this poor lady knows hers."

She grew deeply interested in Lady Clotilde; there was something so winning, so lovable, so true about her. As she looked at the beautiful face, she caught herself wondering what Lord Dynecourt was like, and thinking how very dearly he must love this gentle wife of his—wondering, too, what the shadow on her face meant, and why it was there.

Suddenly, with a peal of childish laughter, little Cyril ran into the drive toward them. Silvia stooped and took him in her arms; she put back the rich cluster of hair from his brow, and then, with motherly pride, said:

"This is my son, Lady Dynecourt."

What happened?

What was there in that childish beautiful face that seemed to hold Lady Dynecourt entranced?

She had grown white as snowdrops, and in her eyes there was a wondering, piteous look. It was only by a violent effort that she aroused herself.

"How strange you must think!" she said; "but there is something so familiar to me in that face—it seems to me as though I had known it and lived with it."

"It is strange," said Silvia; but Mrs. Greville said the same thing."

The pallor deepened on Lady Clotilde's face.

Has she said so? Has she noticed it?" she asked, breathlessly.

"Noticed what?" asked Silvia in amaze.

Then Lady Clotilde remembered herself.

"I mean—does she, too, fancy she can trace a resemblance to some one she knows?"

"So she says," replied Silvia.

Lady Clotilde sat down on one of the garden chairs, and took little Cyril on her knee. Eagerly, anxiously, with wistful, wondering eyes, she scanned each feature of his face. There could be no mistake about it; fancy was not misleading her, nor was imagination deceiving her.

The face into which she gazed so earnestly resembled that of her husband, Basil, Lord Dynecourt, exactly as one drop of water resembles another.

She could not account for it. Of course it must be purely accidental; yet, was there ever anything so startling? the very line of the clustering curls, they fell from the brow in precisely the same fashion; the color of his eyes, the drooping of the long lashes; there could be no more perfect resemblance. Of course it was accidental, yet it hurt her with a strange pain.

"Why should a stranger's child wear his face, while her arms were empty? Lady Clotilde sighed deeply, and warm, bright tears filled her eyes.

"Has your little boy's father been long dead?" she asked.

"It is six years now since I lost him," said Silvia, evasively.

"Had he relatives in England? Was he an Englishman?" asked Lady Clotilde, and her eyes seemed as though they would pierce every thought in Silvia's heart.

She was able to answer with truth, that she had never heard her husband speak of his relatives.

"You loved him very dearly?" said Lady Clotilde, gently.

A warm flush rose to the beautiful face.

"I loved him ten thousand times more dearly than my own life," replied Silvia.

"Ah! that is the right way to love. I have an opinion of my own, and that opinion is, there is no equality in love. One gives all, another reserves all. I do not think it possible to find husband and wife who have an equal love for each other."

"Even that doctrine is not so terrible as some of Mrs. Greville's," replied Silvia, with a smile; "she disbelieves in love altogether."

"Therein she is mistaken: much unhappiness may spring from it, but it would be a wretched world without it."

Still she never put the child down, or took her eyes from his face. She asked his name, and he looked at her as he replied:

Cyril Rymer."

Ah! even the very tone of the childish voice! Was it a mockery? She could have imagined that Lord Dynecourt stood speaking.

"I can not help thinking," she said to Silvia, "that I must know some of your husband's relatives—this face and voice are so familiar. Did you know anything of you husband's family?"

It was a relief to answer truthfully—no, that she did not. She began to wonder at Lady Clotilde's strange manner. Of whom or what did he remind her? Her eyes almost asked the question, and Lady Dynecourt saw it; she tried to repress her eagerness and her curiosity; she talked to the little one, and listened with delight to his pretty answers.

"Why, Cyril," she said, "you will soon be a man."

"I wish it were now," he replied; "then I could always take care of mamma."

"You love mamma so much?" said Lady Dynecourt, wistfully.

"She is all I have in the world," replied the child, with unconscious pathos; "I can not help loving her."

"If he were but mine!" said Lady Clotilde. "I would give all my money, Cyril—everything that I have in the world—for a little boy like you."

He laughed, as though the idea of another little boy just like himself were a great joke; then Silvia told him to run away, he would tire the lady.

The child looked up into the wistful face with a smile; he clasped his little arms around Lady Clotilde's neck.

"You are a beautiful lady," he said; "I love you very much."

She kissed him, and let him down, with tears in her eyes. She rose abruptly, and walked away. Silvia did not follow her she seemed by instinct to understand that the beautiful, unhappy lady would prefer to be alone.

But after that morning it was wonderful to see how fond Lady Dynecourt became of the boy; she was always asking for him, always begging to have him with her.

"I shall hope to see little Cyril in London," she said. "You must be kind to me, Mrs. Rymer, and let me have him for a whole week to myself."

And Silvia, who would have done anything to console and comfort her, laughingly promised that she should have him whenever she wished.

They little dreamed that it was to his own father's house the child had been invited—the house that, if right prevailed, must one day be his.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

MAY we ask Mr. Mowat to take into his serious consideration the advisability of carefully inspecting the vertebra of any future appointees to the judiciary? Some of his present officials are lamentably weak in this section of their anatomy.—Arthur Enterprise.

THE latest acquisition to the town is a board of trade. As THE SUN remarked before, there is abundance of work waiting to be dealt with by such an organization. If the board avoids petty squabbles and work hand in hand for the benefit of the town no doubt much good will result therefrom.

IT is stated that over twenty of the largest mills in Ontario, Quebec and Manitoba, have promised to send exhibits of flour to the exhibition at Jamaica and that nearly all the prominent bakers have requested that the flour be made into bread and given away on the spot, as the best test of its quality.

IT seems that the French Legation at Washington objected very strongly to the reception by Collector Erhardt, of New York, of the Comte de Paris, who arrived in that city last week in the name of the President. The French minister's objection to the Count's reception in the name of the President was based on the argument that the Comte is practically a disturber of the peace, and desires to bring about the destruction of the present French Republic, and that he should not have been received in the name of the President.

SOME samples of the product of the two rowed English barley distributed by the Government last spring have been received at Toronto. One lot from the township of Artemesia weighs 58 pounds to the bushel. This is two pounds over the best samples sent out from England, and better than the standard weight required in the English market, which readily takes grain at 58 pounds to the bushel. The berry is also bright and clean. The season has only been an average one for barley, and the result of the experiment, so far, is, therefore, considered as promising.

LAST Thursday afternoon's fire added another to the long list of illustrations which clearly show the inadequacy of our present fire protection. Just thirty-eight minutes after the alarm was given before the water was turned out. It was not the firemen's fault, however, as they had two branches of hose laid in a comparatively short space of time. The incompetency appeared to be at the engine house, but whether the fault lies with the engineer or the apparatus we are unable to say. The Fire & Water committee should investigate the matter and remedy the evil. If the insurance companies place Orangeville in a lower class the slumbering populace will probably realize the inefficiency or incompetency of things connected with the present system.

THE position of the barley trade on the other side continues much the same, although there are not wanting indications that a large percentage of the recently shipped barley from Canada has come out of the hands of the Canadian shipper into those of the American speculator to maltster. It is evident from the prices offered in Chicago and Buffalo that Canadian grain is a much better article than that produced in the west, the difference in price for all the grades being from 13c to 15c in favor of the Canadian. Dealers in Buffalo and along the line in that vicinity claim that York State barley is equal to Canadian, but in searching the market reports such grain is not quoted. The fact of the matter is that the Republican Yankee would even drink poor lager in support of the McKinley Bill.

ACCORDING to the Government officials intelligence from the various provinces indicates that there is a strong feeling among business men in the country in favor of Canada adopting a higher tariff in order to practically exclude American products, both raw and manufactured. The Dominion last year imported meats, grain, flour, and other food from the United States at a cost of over $11,000,000. By adopting prohibitory duties Canada, leading Conservatives assert, will create a home market for her own farmers. The Cabinet Ministers will not talk, but the utterances of the Hon. Mr. Foster, Minister of Finance, at St. John, N. B., indicate that the duties on manufactured articles will, if necessary, be further increased, in order to protect the Canadian manufacturers. Sir John Macdonald is author of the epigram, "That if there cannot be reciprocity in natural and manufactured products there must be reciprocity in tariff."

MRS Gilmore a female temperance lecturer from Kansas, is holding meetings in Grand Valley and all the hamlets around. Of course this female exponent of temperance gets a cussing occasion from the temperance people here. The local option clause is her particular theme. A number of gentlemen also address the meetings.

THE CIVIC CIRCUS.

Reeve Lindsay's R. & B. Bylaw Defeated—Ketchum's Wood Bylaw Amended—A Detailed R. & B. Report to be Ready for the Next Meeting.

THE SUN's municipal commissioner was about three minutes behind time on arriving at the council chamber on Monday night. The first thing that caught our eye was the chief-of-police's baton suspended from a nail on the wall and the clerk's all-over fascinating smile. Mayor Walsh, who presided, was ably assisted by Reeve Lindsay, Deputy-reeve Endacott, Ald. Youmans, Bailey, Ketchum, Green, Gillespie, Osborne, King and Pinkney. The last named gentleman was a little late, but he got there just the same. There was nothing to mar the quietness which always surrounds the meetings, save the usual oral agents.

The mayor read

ACCOUNTS

from Myers & Robb, $4; T. Hewitt, $16; T. G. Porter, $1 50; Jas. Harshaw, $3.43½; Jos. Lathwell, $2.75; B. Parkin, $5 50; H. N. Young & Bro, $1 89, were ordered to be paid. Other accounts from Fuller & Allen, 35cts; H. N. Young & Bro., $2 01; C. King, $2.80; W. Fremlin, $3 23, were referred to the Cemetery committee.

A communication was received from A. Whitelock, of Woodstock, owner of the C. V. R. flour mills, requesting the council to reduce the taxes on these premises. The clerk was instructed to inform Mr. Whitelock that the roll had been given to the collector and such matters could not be dealt with at such a late date.

REPORTS.

Ald. Youmans brought in the report of the Printing committee, which recommended the payment of the usual accounts, and that all extra printing go to THE SUN, according to agreement. Adopted

Reeve Lindsay read the treasurer's statement for September.

MORE LIGHT WANTED.

Ald. Ketchum produced the Street Lighting committee's report. The committee was not in favor of complying with the C. P. Rs. request to move the two arc lamps nearer the railway crossing. But the committee was in favor of placing a 32 candlepower incandescent light at the turn on Mill street, opposite the grist mill, at a cost of $4 50 per quarter. Deputy reeve Endacott thought an arc lamp would be much better and asked the cost. The chairman replied that they could get extra arcs at $57 per annum; and that the street lighting account already amounted to nearly $1 300 per annum. Several others expressed their convictions on the subject, but the report was adopted.

Ald. Bailey read a report from the R. & B. committee. It recommended that the waterworks race be cleaned where it crosses Zina street; and that $25 be placed to the committee's credit to carry on necessary repairs. The report was sanctioned.

THE WOOD BYLAW AMENDED.

When the council was in committee of the whole on by-laws Ald. Ketchum introduced his amendment to the wood bylaw. The amendment provides that every load of wood exposed for sale shall be measured and the amount marked on the load with chalk. Emery McLean was appointed to the position of measurer at the enormous salary of $30 per year.

THE EARLY CLOSING MUDDLE.

Ald. Youmans, seconded by Ald Ketchum, introduced a bylaw to provide for the early closing of grocery, drygoods fancy goods, jewellery, hardware, boot and shoe and furniture stores. The petition requesting the passage of such a bylaw was signed by all concerned except one shopkeeper who refused to attach his signature.

The stores mentioned in the bylaw will have to close at 6 o'clock each evening except Wednesday and Saturday and evenings before a holiday. The bylaw provides that any person convicted of breaking the bylaw is liable to a fine not exceeding $50, or in default thereof imprisonment in the common jail for a period not exceeding 21 days. The bylaw will take effect on the 21inst.

NOT TO BE REDUCED.

Reeve Lindsey's promised bylaw providing for the reduction of the number now required to form the R. & B committee. All along it has taken five individuals to compose the committee, and prospects are good for the continuation of the same, although the reeve clearly pointed out the benefit to be gained by the reduction. A large number of cubic feet of natural gas was wasted during the debate. Mayor Walsh favored the reeve's scheme, but the majority didn't, so things remain stats quo. Ald. Ketchum moved in amendment that the number be four, but this met a similar fate.

LITTLE LEGISLATION.

The clerk was instructed to request the C. P. R. company to extend the plank between the rails at the crossing near the station.

Ald. Ketchum wanted to know if something could not be done to keep the water flowing from the lane in the rear of Broadway on the market square. Ald. Bailey replied that it was the intention of the R. & B. to have the necessary work done.

Ald. Green was asked why he did not bring in a report of the Assessment committee. He said he would have a report ready for the next meeting.

Ald. Bailey informed the council that he could not possibly have a detailed report of the R. & B. committee ready owing to sickness in his family which occupied a good deal of his time. He was allowed until the next meeting to have one in shape.

Reeve Lindsey didn't like the portion of the Printing committee's report which referred to mistakes made in the division of the work. Ald. Youmans explained that another fellow besides Mr. Lindsey made a mistake.

No heated arguments were on the programme after the meeting adjourned.

A simple, homely remedy for many tree ailments and enemies is wood ashes; or, if not to be had, coal ashes with a sprinkling of lime—but ashes; ashes to be used freely before mulching (against frost or drought); after mulching, that no tree enemies may harbor therein; the mulching itself, when gathered up, to be burned and returned to the trees. The young trees should have plenty of tree filings or cinders around the roots when planted. If the iron is not needed it will not be absorbed, therefore there can be no harm in its use.

BENNETT DISCHARGED. — Fawcett Bennett, the Orangeville boy who was arrested at Hamilton a couple of months ago, charged with stealing John F. Ewings' watch and chain, appeared before Judge McCarthy for trial yesterday. Mayor Walsh was retained for the defence, while Crown-Attorney MacMillan prosecuted. His honor did not think the evidence was strong enough to convict Bennett.

THE ZULU MAID.—This pleasing play from the pen of Mrs. R. T. Haun will be rendered in the town hall on Thursday evening next, the 30th inst. Mrs. Haun, who is classed in the first rank of amateur actresses, will play one of the leading parts and will be ably assisted by Misses Ward, of Alton, Minnie MacMillan, B. Haun, Olive Stewart and Messrs. Fred Wilson and W. J. L. McKay. See programs.

ACCIDENT.—A serious accident befell Mr. Noble Moore, who resides in Caledon in the vicinity of the C. P. R. station, at Alton yesterday. It appears Mr. Moore was driving along when the horse shied and precipitated the occupant to the ground, the wheel passing over his legs and breaking the left one below the knee. Dr. Henry was summoned and attended to Mr. Moore's injuries. He was removed to his home, where he will have to remain for several weeks.

NOT COMING.—Last Friday Ald. Gillespie received a telegram from the manager of the Swedish ladies' concert company announcing that they would be unable to reach Orangeville to-day. The Y. P. A. of the Methodist church had this excellent troupe engaged to give a concert in the town hall this evening. The Swedish ladies sang at St. Catharines last night, and the trains do not connect in time for their arrival here this evening. Both the Y. P. A. and the citizens are disappointed but of the Swedish ladies cannot revisit us.

WAYBE BREAKING GAOL AGAIN.—The charges against Waybe Williams, Thomas Edwards and John Lowery, jr., of stealing a watch from William Henry of Mono Mills were resumed before his Honor Judge McCarthy at the court house on Friday afternoon. The three accused were represented by Kelly Myers, Q. C. Hicks and Edwards were present, but Lowery was absent owing to sickness. After Crown Attorney MacMillan had submitted all the evidence for the prosecution the judge held that no case was made out and accordingly discharged the trio.

TWO DOLLARS AND COSTS.—Albert Doddaweede and David Sawyers are two young rakoots who reside in the township of Amaranth. From Friday's police court proceedings we infer that they both courted the same young lady. One day a short time ago the rival lovers met and quarreled over their rustic sharmer. We don't know whether Doddaweede was warbling "Annie Rooney" or not, but Sawyer pasted him on the face and left his two eyes in mourning. For the deprivation of countenance, Sawyers, was mulcted for $2 and costs of trial. A pretty nice mess for a lover to be in?

A METHODIST MINISTER SUSPENDED. On Tuesday afternoon Rev. M. L. Pearson, chairman of the Orangeville district, Rev. H. W. McTavish, of Shelburne, J. W. Caldwell, M. A., B. D., of Hornings Mills, and Wilson McDonald, of Rosemont, met at Honeywood to investigate charges of heresy preferred against Rev. James Thompson, Methodist minister at that place. The second pleaded guilty as to having taught the objectional doctrines of "conditional immortality," and the "annihilation of the wicked," and was accordingly suspended from the ministry of the church, pending final action in the matter by the next annual conference.

AUTUMN WEDDING.—A very pleasing event took place at 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon the 15th, at the residence of Jas. Golden, Esq., ex reeve of Amaranth, when his fourth daughter, Miss Victoria, was united in the sacred bonds of wedlock with Mr. Charles Loree, a popular young merchant of Fergus. The bride was attired in a handsome cashmere gown, and was attended by Miss Golden, of Brampton, while the groom was assisted by Mr. Thompson, of Fergus. Rev. Thos. Leonard of Laurel performed the ceremony after which about fifty guests sat down to a magnificent wedding breakfast. The young couple received the hearty congratulations of many friends and acquaintances, and left for their home in Fergus by the C.P.R. at 5.45.

ANOTHER LARCENY CASE.—Neil McGill of Erin has placed himself in a rather unenviable position by indulging in too much whiskey and associating with evil company. The charge made against McGill is that of stealing $26 from Joe White of East Garafraxa. The Saturday after the Dufferin exhibition McGill and White, accompanied by several companions, made a tour of the hotels and drank from the cup that inebriates and tangles people's legs up. Some time after the gang separated White, who did most of the treating, realized that he was out just $26, and this fact induced him to have McGill paraded before the magistrate charged with the theft. The case was ventilated before P. M. Pattullo on Tuesday, but owing to the absence of one witness a decision was given. McGill will probably be discharged.

IT SHOULD BE DONE.—Our talented contemporary, the Arthur Enterprise hits the nail on the head when it says: The time of year has arrived when farmers begin to count noses and horns, and look up cattle, etc., which have been allowed to roam at their own sweet will all summer. In cases of this nature neighbors, as an act of courtesy as well as a legal requirement, where they have stock about their places that does not belong to them, should advertise the same in a local paper. The law is very explicit in this respect, a heavy penalty attaching to any case where a person harbors animals without making the fact public. No farmer having stock astray can reasonably object to paying the cost of the necessary advertisement as it in most cases saves a vast deal of time and trouble. In every case where a farmer desires to be honest he will advertise the fact that stray animals are on his premises. His not doing so is an aspersion upon his probity. We trust our readers will make a careful note of this and do as they would wish to be done by. Those having lost stock would also do well to advertise them. A newspaper advertisement will find them more quickly and cheaply than yourself, your hired man and all your relations.

NEIL'S LIVERY SCORCHED.—Neil's livery stable on Mill street had a narrow escape from being consumed by fire at twenty five minutes after four on Thursday afternoon. The alarm was given at 4.25, and in eight minutes afterwards the firemen had two lines of hose laid all ready for action, but it was fully half an hour before sufficient pressure was on to make the water bubble out of the nozzle. The fire started from a stove pipe in the harness room and the fact that it didn't spread quickly saved the structure. All the doors and windows were kept closed so that no air would get at the fire. The firemen not having ladders, experienced some difficulty in reaching the windows of the second storey. Some of the crowd helped them out of this dilemma by running an old buggy up against the building and placing a step ladder in it. After steam was up they found little difficulty in extinguishing the flames, the fire having been confined to the front part of the second flat. No horses were in the stable at the time. Some mattress up stairs were pretty badly smashed. Mr. Neil estimates his loss on the building at about $100; insured in the Mercantile for $300; contents $150, insured in the Royal for $1100.

FOR SOME JUDGE.

A Quack Doctor Spends Two Days in Jail and Pays Twenty-Five Dollars.

A quack medicine company occupied the town hall from Wednesday until Saturday last week, and indeed the credulous to impart hard-earned money to quack medicines, pills, etc. The medicine-condemnation had a touch-and-go affair in connection, which gave very the performance. One of the flaming bills on the programme were neatly headed man who came out dressed as a girl in knee dresses and sang songs and kicked up his heels in such a manner as to make the timid fair sex blush. The first night of the performance the proprietor of the gang harangued the audience to the effect that his check (not check) was worth $50,000 and that he possessed more diamonds than any other man in Canada. Of course, as in every fraud, some people were silly enough to believe the proprietor a twaddle and were foolish enough to hand over their dollars. The lecturer also told anybody who invested in the medicine could have a free consultation with "Dr. Jones," who they said was a highly qualified physician and who would tell them whether they needed the medicine or not. Curiously enough people bought the trash and went to consult "Dr. Wood." It invariably to say the "doctor" advised them to purchase another bottle. But just about this time Pharmacy Detective Webb of London appeared on the scene and had the alleged doctor arrested for practising medicine illegally. The case came up before Mayor Walsh on Saturday and he imposed a fine of $25 without costs or ten days in jail. The "doctor had no money and the rest of the troupe wouldn't come to his assistance so he was committed to jail. He telegraphed to a friend at Toronto to come up and pay his fine. The friend arrived Monday evening and the quack was released. He left for the city Tuesday evening.

"Dr. Jones" turns out to be a man named Lee, who some time ago was in Orangeville soliciting subscribers for the Toronto Mail.

When will some people have sense enough to let quacks and frauds pass harmlessly by? A number who had money to throw away on that trash never can find enough money to pay honest debts.

SHELBURNE.

(Free Press and Economist.)

Mr. John Duncan, of Amaranth, has sent that went to the woods, caught a partridge and returned to the barn, and killed it, and some of our Shelburne sportsmen are thinking of training their cats.

At the annual meeting of the Shelburne Turf Association, held a few days ago, the following officers were elected: Directors, Dr. Norton, W. McCutcheon, Angus Bell, J. C. Whitten, John Hamilton; Treasurer, R. A. Riley; Secretary R. L. Mortimer; Auditors, Chas. Mason, H. Falconer.

We understand that all the merchants of Shelburne have decided to buy butter in future strictly according to quality. This is as it should be, and will give good buttermakers a chance to get the value of their product. The custom of paying so much per pound regardless of quality has almost ruined the butter trade of this country and we are glad to see our merchants make a move in the right direction at last.

A bell tower is now in course of erection at the fire hall. It will be about 70 feet in height, and the lower portion will be used for drying the hose. Heretofore there has been no means of doing this, and when allowed to remain wet the hose soon becomes worthless, and are very apt to give way at the most critical time during a fire. An excellent bell has been purchased by the Council, which will be placed in position as soon as the tower is completed.

A public meeting was held in the Free Press office on Monday evening for the purpose of forming a club to be known as the Shelburne Athletic Club. The Society intend fitting up the upper flat in the Berwick Block as a gymnasium. The officers elected were Rev. H. W. McTavish president; F. H. Silk secretary-treasurer; trustees, R. A. Riley, H. W. McTavish, F. H. Silk, James Chalmers and Oscar Anderson. About twenty young men have already given in their names as members. The object of the club is a good one and we hope to see it well patronized by the young people of Shelburne.

ORANGEVILLE BOARD OF TRADE.

The Work of Organizing Commenced—List of Officers Elected—Local Press Representatives Honorary Members.

Another meeting of the promoters of a board of trade was held in the council chamber on Tuesday evening to complete the work of organizing. The attendance was not very large, but then those who were there encouraged the promoters of the movement. Mr. Thos. Stevenson ably discharged the duties of chairman while Ald. Green jotted down the proceedings. The constitution of the Owosso board was read with a view to Orangeville adopting a similar one. There were about fifty names on the membership roll on Tuesday evening.

The election of officers was a rather exciting event. The following is a list: T. Stevenson, president; Geo. Endacott, vice-president; T. L. Mercer, treasurer; W. T. Bailey, secretary; W. Still, H. N. Young, T. MacAdam, J. R. Dodds, W. Fleming, R. Mann, Alex. Johnston, Geo. Beswick, W. W. Ruthven, J. S. Leighton, and others, council. The election of an honorary president was left over till next meeting. The council consists of fourteen, seven of which will be a quorum.

The board elected the local press representatives honorary members. A communication from T. Moffat & Sons, stove manufacturers at Markdale, saying they could not negotiate with Orangeville until they received a definite reply from the town of Meaford. The council will meet in the council chamber tomorrow evening and the board will meet in the same place on Monday evening

A PARTING SHOT.

To the Editor of THE SUN:

SIR,—Allow me space in your paper for a few words.
